Torres: Improved status bill has a better chance this time

By JON PEREZ

The effort to grant improved status to qualified guest workers in the CNMI may finally have a strong chance to hurdle the 116th U.S. Congress since the House of Representatives is currently controlled by Democrats—or so Gov. Ralph DLG Torres believes.

Torres

Granting improved status to long-term guest workers in the CNMI is part of a legislative fix that U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services director L. Francis Cissna had suggested in order to resolve the issue on the termination of the CNMI parole program.

Last Dec. 27, USCIS terminated the CNMI parole program, affecting close to 2,000 workers that use the program to work and stay in the Commonwealth. That means immediate relatives of U.S. citizens and other stateless individuals, CNMI permanent residents and their IRs, IRs of citizens of Freely Associated States (the Federated States of Mi-

2 in alleged True Value burglary plead not guilty

By KIMBERLY A. BAUTISTA
kimberly_bautista@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The two men who allegedly burglarized the True Value Hardware and the I Love Saipan Pop Up Store have pleaded not guilty to all 16 charges filed against them.

Steven Hasugulgam, 22, and Irwin Duane Teregeyo, 19, were charged with four counts of conspiracy to commit burglary and theft, four counts of burglary, four counts of theft, and four counts of criminal mischief following the burglary of both the True Value Hardware and the Pop Up Store back in December.

Both Hasugulgam and Teregeyo entered pleas of not guilty to all counts before Superior Court Presiding Judge Robert Naraja.

Hasugulgam and Teregeyo are set for status conferences on March 12.

Police said they received a call about a burglary and theft incident at True Value Hardware on Beach Road, Garapan and at I Love Saipan Pop Up Store on Middle Road in Chalan Laulau on Dec. 27, 2018.

At 8:33am, police learned that the steel bars leading to the back door of True Value Hardware were pried off the wall and the steel door was pried open too.

In a review of the business establishment's surveillance camera, police saw two individuals with covered faces breaking the back door and entering at 2:34am.

Police noted that one of the suspects walked with a limp and had a tattoo on his left forearm.

Police said the two suspects proceeded to the cash register and pried it open with a crowbar. The two then took some tools and left through the back door.

On Dec. 27, 2018, at 8:56am, police were informed that I Love Saipan Pop Up Store was broken into through the back door.

Police reviewed the store's surveillance camera and saw that a white Toyota Corolla had entered the dirt road heading to the back of I Love Saipan. Two men then broke into the back door at 4am.

Police concluded that True Value Hardware and I Love Saipan were robbed by the same suspects.

At 11:06am on the same day, police initiated a traffic stop on a white Toyota Corolla at the Sadog Tasi Gas Station for a faulty break light.

Police noticed a red beanie, several G-Shock containers, and a red drone on the back-seat floor of the vehicle.

When asked for his driver's license, the operator of the vehicle said he did not have any. Police also observed that the driver had a tattoo on his left forearm.

Police said employees of both business establishments identified the items in the vehicle as the stolen items.

The other items recovered by the police included a generator, two duffle bags containing assorted clothing and watches, portable chargers, and anti-theft devices.

Hasugulgam later told police that burglarizing both stores was Teregeyo's idea.

OAG objects to subpoena of prosecutor

By FERDIE DE LA TORRE
ferdie_delatorre@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The Office of the Attorney General objects to a subpoena by a defendant in a sexual abuse case that requires a prosecutor to appear in court and produce documents during her meeting with the alleged victim.

In the government's motion to quash, assistant attorney general Robert "Charlie" Lee said that Joseph Seman Epina's subpoena exceeds the scope of discovery available to him under the NMI Rule of Criminal Procedure.

The documents and communications Epina seek are exempt from discovery and are expressly forbidden under the rule, said Lee in the government's motion filed Monday before the Superior Court.

Epina, through the Office of the Public Defender, served the subpoena on assistant attorney general Teri Tenorio last Jan. 25.

The subpoena requires Tenorio's appearance in court on Feb. 15, 2019. The subpoena also seeks privileged communications and the work product of the OAG.

Epina's subpoena directs Tenorio to produce all documents indicating dates that she met with the victim, all communications between her and the victim, and all reports drafted, edited, reviewed, or received by Tenorio that refer to meetings with the victim.

Superior Court Associate Judge Joseph N. Camacho set the hearing on the government's motion to quash for Feb. 15 at 9am.

The 44-year-old Epina is facing charges of raping a then-12-year-old girl on Saipan on March 12, 2016. The girl told police that it was not the first time that he had sexually assaulted her.

OAG charged Epina with sexual assault of a minor in the first degree, assault and battery, and disturbing the peace.

In the government's objection, Lee said the subpoena broadly defines "documents" to include government memoranda, notes, emails, minute records, employment files, case files, correspondence, and various other articles.

Lee said the subpoena contains an even broader definition of "communications."

Lee said the subpoena for Tenorio seeks such a "broad and ill-defined range of information that compliance with the subpoenas would be unreasonable and oppressive, especially in light of a prosecutor's need to speak with a victim in preparation for a hearing or a trial."

Lee said Epina has shown no compelling need for Tenorio's testimony.

Lee said the subpoena is not a discovery tool, and that it must be targeted at a specific issue.

Lee said Epina has already received all recorded and written statements made by the victim, and has even cross-examined the girl at a hearing in July 2018 regarding the statements she made about the alleged offense.

He said the subpoena for Tenorio is directed at a government attorney, and the rule protects the work of government attorneys from disclosure—even if they pertain to communications with the victim.

Citing precedent, Lee said the court rejected a defendant's claim that he was entitled to the notes of an AAG because they contained witness statements.

Lee said in that precedent, the court held that even if the notes contained witness statements, they were internal documents exempted from disclosure.

Glass believes man is liable to pay over $1K in restitution

By KIMBERLY A. BAUTISTA
Kimberly_bautista@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The government lawyer in a case involving a man who allegedly ran over, killed, and abandoned a 21-year-old man in Puerto Rico, Saipan believes that the family of the victim is entitled to more than $1,000 in restitution.

Assistant attorney general Robert Glass said that full restitution to the victim's family should be more than $1,000. He has submitted a request for a hearing to determine the exact amount. Glass filed the motion for a restitution hearing last Friday

According to the filed motion, Glass said the parties in Commonwealth v. Ezeziel Smith may have already agreed to the minimum amount of $1,000 as restitution, the Commonwealth believes full restitution will be more than $1,000.

The Office of the Attorney General is requesting a hearing to determine the exact amount of restitution and the structure of payments to the victim's family.

The first $1,000 was paid out to the victim's next of kin out of Smith's posted bail.

Last week, Superior Court Associate Judge Joseph Camacho sentenced Smith, 31, to serve a five-year and six-month imprisonment sentence, with six months suspended for an auto-pedestrian incident that killed the 21-year-old man. Smith was given credit for the 180 days he had already served.

Smith, who appeared out of custody, was escorted back to the Department of Public Safety to serve his sentence immediately.

Camacho also said that Smith would be eligible for work release, something he doesn't allow very often.

Camacho said that he would allow Smith's work release while he serves his sentence because he appreciated that Smith showed great remorse for his crime. "The fact that you turned yourself in carries a lot of weight," Camacho said during sentencing.

Work release means that Smith would be able to work while incarcerated.

Aside from imprisonment, Smith will also serve probation after he is released, and would pay court fines and restitution to the family of the victim.

Smith pleaded guilty to leaving the scene of the accident and reckless driving

On Aug. 19, 2018 at approximately 3:37am, DPS received a call about an auto-pedestrian incident near the Commonwealth Utility Corp. power plant.

Upon arriving at the scene, officers met with the caller who had reported the incident.

According to the caller, he was heading north when he noticed a man lying on the ground. He immediately stopped to call authorities.

DPS reported that the victim had injuries, was unconscious, and was partially lying on the shoulder of the northbound outer lane.

Medics arrived shortly after and rushed the victim to the Commonwealth Health Center where he was pronounced dead at 4:01am.

Superior Court qualifies Dreary as an expert

By KIMBERLY A. BAUTISTA
Kimberly_bautista@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The Superior Court has qualified the Office of the Attorney General's expert as an actual expert in sexual abuse examinations and will allow him to testify his findings.

Superior Court Presiding Judge Robert Naraja denied, in part, the order of limine filed by defense lawyer Bruce Berline in the case of Manolo Romolor. Romolor is charged with sexual assault in the first degree and assault and battery.

Berline filed an order of limine to exclude Dr. Michael Dreary as an expert in the trial.

Order of limine is a motion filed by a party to a lawsuit which asks the court for an order or ruling limiting or preventing certain evidence from being presented by the other side at the trial of the case.

The Superior Court denied part of the filed order because the court found that Dreary qualifies as an expert in sexual assault examinations due to his extensive background in obstetrics and gynecology.

"The subject matter of Dr. Dreary's proposed expert testimony is well within Dr. Dreary's knowledge, skill, experience, and education," the court order states.

The Superior Court did grant part of the defense's filed order by excluding Dreary from giving any testimony on the common misconceptions regarding the medical diagnosis of sexual assault patients.

"It is clear to the court that it is a bridge too far for Dr. Dreary to be qualified as an expert on sexual assault misconceptions. The court would like to make it clear that Dr. Dreary is not allowed to testify at in any way regarding any misconceptions associated with sexual assault. Dreary can testify to his medical findings and medical opinions of his sexual assault examination for the alleged victim," the court order states.

The jury trial for Romolor is set for Feb. 11, 2019.

Police said Romolor admitted sexually assaulting the victim and that he only stopped when their other friend punched him thrice.

According to the victim, she had attended a small party at a friend's apartment when the incident happened in 2016.

The victim said she took five shots of liquor and that she became drunk and her friend's wife helped her inside her bedroom where she slept.

500 Sails sets Boat Nights schedule

500 Sails has announced its Boat Night schedule for February 2019. It is opening its doors to volunteers who want to help build canoes from modern materials using traditional designs.

Boat Nights take place at the 500 Sails' boatyard in lower base, next to the Department of Lands and Natural Resources. The program's goal is to get canoes into the daily lives of the community and can result in ownership of one's own canoe.

Boat Nights will be ongoing on Wednesdays and Thursdays from 6pm to 9pm throughout February and March. Also, new this month is an additional Boat Night on Saturdays from 1pm to 5pm.

Teens are allowed with accompanying and participating adult guardian. Participation is free.

For more information contact Pete Perez at pperez@500sails.org, see the 500 Sails Facebook page at <https://www.facebook.com/500sails>. (PR)

INTERNET

even TV transmissions between continents at the speed of light. A single cable can carry tens of terabits of information per second.

While researching my book The Undersea Network, I realized that the cables we all rely on to send everything from email to banking information across the seas remain largely unregulated and undefended. Although they are laid by only a few companies — including the American company SubCom and the French company Alcatel-Lucent — and often funneled along narrow paths, the ocean's vastness has often provided them protection. When one is broken, as the Tonga cable was this week, data traffic comes to a halt.

imaginings of the internet. Didn't we develop satellites and Wi-Fi to transmit signals through the air? Haven't we moved to the cloud? Undersea cable systems sound like a thing of the past.

The reality is that the cloud is actually under the ocean. Even though they might seem behind the times, fiber optic cables are actually state-of-the-art global communications technologies. Since they use light to encode information and remain unfettered by weather, cables carry data faster and cheaper than satellites. They crisscross the continents too — a message from New York to California also travels by fiber optic cable. These systems are not going to be replaced by aerial communications anytime soon.

A vulnerable system?

The biggest problem with cable systems is not technological — it's human. Because they run underground, underwater and between telephone poles, cable systems populate the same spaces people do. As a result, they're accidentally broken all the time. Local construction projects dig up terrestrial lines. Boaters drop anchors on cables. And submarines can pinpoint systems under the sea.

Most media coverage about these systems has been dominated by the question of vulnerability. Are global communications networks really at risk of disruption? What would happen if these cables were cut? Should we all be worrying about a digital blackout — whether caused by accident or terrorists?

The answer to this is not black and white. Any individual cable is always at risk, but likely far more so from boaters and fishermen than any saboteur. Over history, the single largest cause of disruption has been people unintentionally dropping anchors and nets. The International Cable Protection Committee has been working for years to prevent such breaks.

As a result, cables today are covered in steel armor and buried beneath the seafloor at their shore-ends, where the human threat is most concentrated. This provides some level of protection. In the deep sea, the ocean's inaccessibility largely safeguards cables — they need only to be covered with a thin polyethylene sheath. It's not that it's much more difficult to sever cables in the deep ocean, it's just that the primary forms of interference are less likely to happen. The sea is so big and the cables are so narrow, the probability isn't that high that you'd run across one.

Sabotage has actually been rare in the history of undersea cables. There are certainly occurrences (though none recently), but these are disproportionately publicized. The World War I German raid of the Fanning Island cable station in the Pacific Ocean gets a lot of attention. And there was speculation about sabotage in the cable disruptions outside Alexandria, Egypt in 2008, which cut 70 percent of the country's internet, affecting millions. Yet you hear little about the regular faults that occur, on average, about 200 times each year.

and I offer my support to your efforts in Congress."

Sablan has already introduced two pieces of legislation—H.R. 559 and 560—more than two weeks after the opening of the 116th Congress. Both bills hope to give permanent status to qualified individuals in the CNMI.

The two bills hope to address the status of workers under the humanitarian parole program and employment authorization document, as well as long-term workers and foreign investors. The legislation also aims to save the status of close to 2,000 workers affected by USCIS' decision.

Granting long-term guest workers improved status has been a contentious and lengthy labor and immigration issue in the CNMI, a move that had been attempted several times but have proven futile.

the prescribed eye drops and eyeglasses.

In a complaint he filed without a lawyer, Guerrero named the DOC, Corrections Commissioner Vince Attao, then-DOC commissioner Georgia M. Cabrera, and sever other DOC officers as defendants.

Guerrero alleged that the delays in his eye treatment and failure to provide him with prescribed eye drops on two occasions, and delay in providing prescribed eyeglasses caused him pain and suffering and his cracked right rib.

Guerrero said Attao ignored his pleas for help, in writing, last May 15 and Sept. 21.

He said his wife also called Attao and his office, asking for help.

He said Cabrera denied him dental treatment despite a recommendation of a Dental Care dentist to replace his teeth.

Guerrero said Cabrera told a DOC nurse and a medical officer that DOC will not replace his dentures because DOC only provides teeth extraction.

He, however, noted that on Aug. 4, 2016, Cabrera appeared before the Senate Committee Fiscal Affairs during a budget hearing in which she stated that the governor has allocated $2 million for the inmates' health care.

Guerrero said the DOC medical officers failed to give him the prescribed eye drops

He said that in March 2018, he was examined by a Marianas Eye Institute doctor, but the DOC medical officers again failed to give him the prescribed eye drops.

In July 2018, Guerrero said he was prescribed new eyeglasses, but the officers took a long time to pick it up at the Marianas Eye Institute. On last July 16, he got into an accident and his right lower rib was injured since he was seeing double while using his old eyeglasses, he said.

It was only last November when he was prescribed eyeglasses, he said.

Guerrero said after the July 16 accident, he requested an X-ray of his right lower rib. He said he was denied that; the DOC's reason was that there is no bone doctor.

Guerrero said that last Nov. 16, he was brought to Dental Care because he was suffering pain and continuous bleeding due to his six teeth extraction.

He said the dentist gave him pain medicine and antibiotics, but the escort officers took them away from him.

Guerrero was convicted of 11 charges relating to sexual abuse of a minor. He started serving the six-year prison term on Dec. 1, 2013.

More than 10 inmates have already filed separate lawsuits in federal court against DOC and its current and former officials and officers for various reasons.

cronesia, the Republic of the Marshall Islands, and the Republic of Palau), and caregivers of CNMI residents.

That prompted Torres to write Delegate Gregorio Kilili C. Sablan (Ind-MP) to inform him that he supports any legislation that would fix the problem. "As you are aware, on Dec. 27, 2018, the U.S. Department of Homeland Security announced their decision to terminate the humanitarian parole program in the CNMI, impacting hundreds of individuals who have lived and called the CNMI home for years."

"In a recent [phone] call with USCIS director Cisna, he informed me of the administration's interest in securing a legislative remedy that will allow these impacted individuals to remain in the CNMI."

He added that his administration is throwing its full support behind the issue, since it is a matter that needs congressional action. "I write to you in support of this effort to request your assistance in working collaboratively with the CNMI government and the Trump administration to navigate this issue through the U.S. Congress."

Torres said that granting improved status to long-term guest workers is an issue that he has already discussed with Sablan. "For years, we have discussed the issue of improved status and, on multiple occasions, I have offered my support and assistance in making this long-held goal a reality."

"Improved status for those previously qualifying for humanitarian parole is just one step. I support efforts to provide improved status for these individuals and for many qualified individuals who have lived and worked in the CNMI prior to the initiation of the enactment of U.S. Public Law 110-229 [the Consolidated Natural Resources Act of 2008]."

Torres believes that the legislative fix USCIS is suggesting has a strong chance of making it through the 116th Congress. "As we enter into the 116th Congress, the CNMI's representation within the Democrat-controlled U.S. House of Representatives grants us the opportune time to make progress toward the completion of this goal. Your role in seeing this goal to a successful outcome is crucial

Apatang reactivates program to remove junk cars

Saipan Mayor David M. Apatang expects to see an increase in the number of junk cars after his office recently renewed its effort to rid the island of abandoned vehicles that are eyesores and health hazards in the community.

Apatang noted in an interview with Saipan Tribune yesterday that he is expecting a higher number of requests coming in to take care of abandoned cars, especially since Super Typhoon Yutu cleanup is ongoing.

Apatang's office reactivated the junk car collection program last week after it got pushed to the side in order to prioritize the office's cleanup effort following Yutu.

"When you drive around [Saipan] there are a lot of cars smashed up," said Apatang. "We are just waiting for the owners to [ask us] to pick them up."

Junk cars are then brought to a third-party recycling center before it is prepared for scrap metal recycling.

"We were concentrating on the typhoon first. Now that our dump truck is out of the shop and there are a lot of requests for junk car removals, we are working on that now also," he said.

Saipan Mayor's Office field operations director Joann Aquino told Saipan Tribune that junk car removal requests have started to pile into a large backlog.

"...We have a lot of junk car removal requests since October 2018, when we have been full force in debris collection across Saipan, and not on junk car removal," she said.

The office's lone claw truck was used for debris removal instead of the usual junk car removal.

Aquino said the claw truck could hold up to two cars at a time and is usually working with an 8-cubic yard dump truck, which could fit about two cars as well.

From Oct. 26, 2018, up to Feb. 3, 2019, the Saipan Mayor's Office has collected over 102,000 cubic yards of debris from Yutu.

"We are trying to catch up and go back to our previous requests that were filed. We are trying to address those requests," she said. "We started in As Lito and Gualo Rai."

As of yesterday, their staff had completed removing junk cars in As Lito.

To get a junk car removed, you may call the Saipan Mayor's Office to submit a request at 234-6208. (Erwin Encinares)

CEC wants polling sites for special poll back at Garapan, Oleai schools

The Commonwealth Election Commission wants to hold the March 23 special election at the Garapan and Oleai elementary schools—the traditional polling places for Precinct 3 voters.

Due to typhoon damage at the Garapan and Oleai schools, the polling sites for Precinct 3 voters last November were moved to Garapan Central Park and at the Marianas Visitors Authority office in Oleai/San Jose.

CEC executive director Julita Villagomez said yesterday that they had already asked the Public School System to allow them to use the cafeterias of the Garapan and Oleai schools.

"We want to go back to the old system," she said.

They were told that the Oleai school is still renovating its cafeteria. Villagomez said they asked for a classroom instead.

Villagomez said they are still awaiting reply from Education Commissioner Glenn Muña.

As of last Jan. 28, there were 3,361 registered voters for Precinct 3.

CEC closed the registration for Precinct 3 last Jan. 23.

The special election became necessary with the demise of Rep. Francisco D. Dela Cruz last month. (Ferdie de la Torre)

Bill to widen CCC powers in the works

The Commonwealth Casino Commission will be working closely with the 21st CNMI Legislature and the CNMI Office of the Attorney General in crafting legislation that would clarify and widen its regulatory functions.

The legislation went back to the drawing board after House Bill 20-82, House Draft 1, Senate Draft 1 failed to get the needed three-fourths vote in the House during a lame duck session in the 20th Legislature.

House Bill 20-82, introduced by then-representatives Joseph P. Deleon Guerrero, would have clarified some of CCC's powers due to its unique regulatory powers and oversight of the casino gaming industry.

CCC chair Juan M. Sablan said it is important that they meet with members of the Legislature, especially the gaming committees of both the House and the Senate.

"We have to meet with the new Legislature again and address this issue once and for all. This has been going since day one when we were appointed. We're trying to help the Legislature and the government to perhaps regulate poker, eliminate crimes, and get some...more revenue for the CNMI," said Sablan.

He said in a previous interview that they would again push for the measures embodied in H.B. 20-82 in the 21st Legislature. "It is important that we meet with the new Legislature. [HB 20-82] was passed unanimously but got killed after the OAG gave its opinion."

"...We're here to regulate and protect the industry and the public. That is what's important. We're not yet done and we have to continue this in the [21st] Legislature."

The legislation that CCC would be working on would place the regulatory and oversight powers of e-gaming, lottery, pachinko, and poker under the commission. The same efforts were also introduced in the 18th and 19th legislatures.

Sablan said poker also needs to be monitored closely. "Personally, [I think poker] is not monitored correctly. They are in our villages with issues on security, lighting, and even equipment. The government has to address that issue personnel, facilities, and procedures. We look at everything."

"We need additional manpower for some sort of legislation that may affect the regulatory regime of poker, pachinko, e-gaming, and lottery. Right now, we are only doing casino, but I think it actually makes a good public policy that you put under one umbrella the regulatory functions so you don't have too many agencies and activities doing the same thing."

Deleon Guerrero cited Australia as an example where gaming and alcohol are under one regulatory body.

He said there are people that say that it is not CCC's job to check on labor and immigration issues since some of it fall under the federal government's jurisdiction. # Democrats support medicinal marijuana but...

By KIMBERLY A. BAUTISTA
Kimberly_bautista@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The CNMI Democratic Party supports medicinal marijuana but believes that further study should be done before approving recreational marijuana.

According to CNMI Democratic Party chair Nola Hix, the Democrats have reached a unanimous decision that they agree with the enactment of medicinal marijuana but they still have questions about its recreational use.

"We have basically reached a consensus in regards to agreeing with the cannabis bill in regards to the medicinal part. I think there are a ton of questions that have been raised with regards to the recreational part," she said.

Although many see recreational marijuana as a means of economic growth, there is still research to be done on its effects, Hix said.

"I know that a lot of people see this as economically a great thing but we really need to be prepared. We really need to do some homework on where it's recreational now—to see what's happening, what are the issues—because a lot of people have been bringing it up and because we're such a small island, we need to be prepared to address the stuff moving forward," she said.

"I know it's been passed [but] I think there are several concerns from a lot of constituents with regards to the recreational part. We all need to work on addressing some of the issues before we just roll this out," she added.

Hix is personally concerned about where the money will come from in terms of the Cannabis Commission's salaries.

"My biggest concern is that they mirrored the casino bill with regards to the commission. The commission that they're looking to bring on board is going to be paid $65,000 a year. Where is that money coming from? Is that taxpayers' money and that's my biggest concern," she said.

Hix used the casino as an example. According to Hix, if the CNMI struggles with the regulation of the casino, it would be even more challenging to regulate recreational cannabis.

"If we can barely even regulate a casino, what makes us think we are experts in the cannabis field? We want to be. I know Ralph DLG Torres is proud to be the first to get it passed, but we are not cannabis experts, just as we weren't casino experts," she said.

'Lions' raid businesses in celebration of Lunar New Year

The Chinese Association of the CNMI performed traditional lion dances in several businesses throughout Saipan yesterday in celebration of the Lunar New Year.

Lion dances are customary during celebration of the Lunar New Year and signifies the richness of the Chinese culture.

"We share that culture with other countries like [Saipan], we share the culture to the local people," said Chinese Association of the CNMI's Rose Chan.

Chan said the lion dance goes hand in hand with fireworks and percussive instruments—traditionally symbolic to drive away evil spirits and bring luck to a business establishment.

"...We expel evil spirits and wild animals with the lion dance. They chase away evil so when the drum beats, it scares the evil spirits. When wild animals hear the firecrackers, they stay away," she said. "When there are no more evil spirits and wild animals, the good luck enters and keeps coming."

The lion dance also serves as a fundraiser for the Chinese Education Center in Chinatown. The education center teaches Cantonese to those of Chinese descent and others interested. Chan is currently the school's principal.

"[The students] go to regular English classes in the morning and in the evening they go to the Chinese Education Center to learn their culture and their language," she said.

She noted that their target is to raise about $10,000 annually, and the association had been conducting lion dances since 1987, back when their president was Tan Siu Lin, father of Tan-Holdings president and chief executive officer Jerry Tan.

'Earthquakes regularly occur in Marianas'

By KIMBERLY A. BAUTISTA
Kimberly_bautista@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The islands within the Marianas archipelago are prone to regular earthquakes because it is part of the Pacific Ring of Fire. In fact, tremors happen almost daily in the Marianas region but they are usually not strong enough to be felt by people, according to Homeland Security Emergency Management Office information officer Nadine Deleon Guerrero.

Over the past week, multiple earthquakes have shaken the Northern Mariana Islands ranging from a 4.0 magnitude temblor to over a 5.0 magnitude quake.

At 10:54am last Jan. 30, a 4.1-magnitude earthquake occurred 67 kilometers south southwest of Pagan. There were no reports of personnel injuries or damages to infrastructure and no tsunami warnings or advisories were issued by the Pacific Tsunami Warning Center.

At 7:16am last Feb. 1, a 5.0-magnitude earthquake occurred 172 kilometers northwest of Farallon de Pajaros. There were no reports of personnel injuries or damage to infrastructure and no tsunami warnings or advisories were issued.

HSEM also reported that at 2:22am last Feb. 2, a 6.5-magnitude earthquake occurred 14.8 north and 92.4 west of Chiapas, Mexico. There were no reports of personnel injuries or damage to infrastructure and no tsunami warnings or advisories were issued.

The Pacific Ring of Fire, or the Circum-Pacific Belt, is a U-shaped area in the Pacific Ocean basin that is made up of about 452 dormant and active volcanoes. The Pacific Ring of Fire is known for the continuous earthquakes influenced by the numerous active volcanoes in the region.

According to an online source, the volcanic activity in the area is a result of the region being close to numerous tectonic plates that are in constant motion and collision. For this reason, the Pacific Ring of Fire is an active location for volcanoes and earthquakes.

The Marianas, being a part of the Pacific Ring of Fire, is prone to experience tremors because of the amount of activity in the area.

Man in alleged machete attack pleads guilty

The man who allegedly slapped and attacked another man with a machete has pleaded guilty.

Daniel Shadel, 33, pleaded guilty yesterday to assault and battery and disturbing the peace and was sentenced to 364 days in prison.

His sentence was suspended except for the 31 days he has already served.

Shadel was also sentenced to probation for 364 days and was required to pay court fees, probation fees, and to served 100 hours of community service.

Shadel's bail of $1,000 was exonerated.

Shadel was arrested last year for assault with a dangerous weapon, assault and battery, and disturbing the peace.

According to police, the victim was with some of his friends at a home of another friend in Koblerville on March 3, 2018, when Shadel arrived, slapped the victim in the face, retrieved a machete from his car, and allegedly swung the machete at the victim.

Another friend intervened and told Shadel to stop. Shadel returned the machete to his car but allegedly slapped the victim again.

Shadel left the house after seeing that the house's owner had called the police. A police officer later found the vehicle and Shadel along Bibingka Avenue in Koblerville and arrested him at 4:33am that same day. The police report did not indicate the motive behind the attack. (Kimberly A. Bautista)

7 graduate from ABE program on Tinian

By ERWIN ENCINARES
erwin_encinares@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

Seven individuals on Tinian have completed a federally funded program that allows adults to obtain their high school certificates.

Tinian students Herman P.

Aldan, Zachery P. Manglona, Isidro C. Tudela, Larry J. Indalecio, Jay B. San Nicolas, Blane C. Martinez II Jr., and Dennis S. Reyes graduated from their Adult Basic Education Program at the Antonio M. Borja Amphitheater at the Natibu Park in Tinian.

The ABE Program is a program that allows its graduates to earn a high school equivalency diploma, which is equivalent to a high school diploma.

Tinian Mayor Edwin Aldan, Tinian Sens Jude Hofschneider (R-Tinian), Francisco Borja, Francisco Cruz (R-Tinian), and (R-Tinian), attended the event over the weekend, including members of the Tinian Municipal Council, Tinian Northern Marianas College staff, and NMC interim president Frankie Eliptico.

"We are very proud for your accomplishments today,"

Eliptico said in his speech, referring to the graduates. "Obtaining your high school diploma marks a major milestone in your lives, and, more importantly, opens many more doors of opportunity."

Eliptico noted that obtaining a high school diploma is one of few steps toward earning a college degree.

"We already have a number of students from Tinian who were in your shoes and who are now on their way to their college degrees. Please know that whether you decide to continue your education toward a college degree immediately after this [graduation] or whether you decide to consider enrolling later, know that we will always be looking forward to welcoming you at NMC," he said.

"In completing the ABE program, you have opened so many doors for yourself. You are now able to attend college. You are eligible to work for the civil service. With some college courses, you can join the military. There are so many possibilities," Tinian Mayor Edwin Aldan noted in his congratulatory remarks.

"You are here because you've made great progress in your personal and professional lives. And in doing so, you've indirectly improved the lives of those around you. You open doors not only for yourself, but for your families and you set a wonderful example for your peers. In bettering yourselves, you have made our island better," he added.

According to a statement from NMC, the Tinian campus has been graduating students from the ABE program since 2004, many of whom now hold jobs such as senior technicians at the Commonwealth Utilities Corp., ranking officers at the Commonwealth Ports Police, and a plumber at CUC.

One, the college noted, even pursued an associate degree and is now a teacher aide at the Tinian High School.

Kilili: US workers are not political pawns

By JON PEREZ
jon_perez@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

Delegate Gregorio Kilili C. Sablan (Ind-MP) has scored President Donald Trump for his insistence on building a wall at the U.S.-Mexican border. Trump is once again threatening to shut down the government.

The federal government already shut down on Dec. 22 and resumed operations on Jan. 29.

Sablan told Saipan Tribune that Trump's demand to fund the construction of "a wasteful and ineffective wall" should not be a reason to shut down the operations of the government. "Governments should not shut down over policy disagreements."

"America's workers should never be used as political pawns—and [last week], Democrats are proud to bring legislation to the floor to give the entire federal civilian workforce a pay raise, providing relief after years of GOP political attacks, pay freezes, and shutdowns."

He said that Trump seemed to have not learned his lesson as he threatens to shut down the government again, subjecting federal government workers to another uncertain future. Trump, in a Sunday USA Today report, said he is ready to declare a national emergency if the 15-member bipartisan committee fails to include funding for his planned border wall.

A national emergency declaration would allow the president to divert billions of dollars in U.S. military construction funds for his border wall, a key campaign promise that he made where he also stated that Mexico would pay for.

Sablan said that even before the government resumed operations, Trump already threatened another "senseless" shutdown. On Jan. 27, two days before the shutdown ended, Trump said shutting down the government again is "certainly an option" if he doesn't get funding for his border wall.

"[It] tells about what the president is thinking even before the 15 conferees start their task of finding agreement to complete the sole remaining piece of the 12 annual appropriations package. The [U.S. Department of Homeland Security] appropriation bill is the contentious and outstanding piece of 12 federal government annual appropriation package," said Sablan.

"The Democrats' unity on behalf of America's workers was critical—working every week to pass bills to re-open the government and pressure the GOP Senate and the White House to act. And the bill [Trump] signed into law to re-open the government was essentially the same bill the House passed before the government shutdown; the bill written by the Republican majority of the 115th Congress."

He added that Trump shutting down the government put the lives of the American people in chaos and inflicted them pain, including federal workers and families in the CNMI, which missed two paychecks. The nonpartisan Congress-sional Budget Office has also released a report that the shutdown cost the U.S. economy an estimated $11 billion, with $3 billion permanently lost.

"For 35 days, the President held hundreds of thousands of workers' paychecks and countless families' financial security, health and wellbeing hostage—forcing workers to miss their bills, communities to lose access to critical services for their health and safety, and America's economy and national security to be harmed, all over the president's demands for an ineffective, wasteful border wall," he said.

GRMC passes CMS follow-up inspection

DEDEDU, Guam—The Guam Regional Medical City has received passing marks from the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services following a recent follow-up inspection at the hospital.

The CMS paid an unannounced visit to GRMC last week on Wednesday, Jan. 30, 2019, to conduct the follow-up survey.

Upon completion of a thorough inspection, GRMC was informed Friday that it had passed the follow-up survey and is in full compliance with The Emergency Medical Treatment and Labor Act.

EMTALA is a federal law that requires emergency departments to stabilize and treat all patients, regardless of their insurance status or ability to pay for treatment.

"We are very pleased that GRMC has passed the CMS' follow-up survey inspection," said Emergency Department nurse manager Sarah Betcher. "It's a testament to the hard work our staff puts in to keeping GRMC a hospital that can be trusted to provide the best care for Guam."

GRMC's success with the CMS survey inspection last week is another in a series for the hospital. In November 2018, GRMC was re-accredited by The Joint Commission for another three years following a three-day inspection.

Later that same month, GRMC's laboratory received accreditation from the prestigious Accreditation Committee of the College of American Pathologists, which the U.S. federal government recognizes as being equal-to or more-stringent than their own inspection program.

"Passing CMS inspections and receiving TJC and CAP accreditations with no conditional findings are achievements we value. However, they are never the end goal for GRMC. In fact, we treat these surveys as catalysts for finding new opportunities for improvement," said chief medical officer Felix T. Cabrera. "Our patients count on us to continually make strides to improve the quality of the healthcare we deliver."

CEO and president Michael Cruz, M.D. agreed. "Achieving these important accreditations and passing inspections is critical to maintaining the public's trust in GRMC. I am very proud of our team for their professional response to an unexpected visit by the CMS and for coming through with flying colors to ensure GRMC will continue providing excellent healthcare for Guam." ## China school donates recycling bins

An international school in China donated recycling bins to a school on Saipan last week under the project called 2017-2018 Exhibition Ocean Pollution.

The International School of Tianjin donated $400 worth of recycling bins to the Brilliant Star Montessori School on Navy Hill.

Ocean Plus Saipan Dive Shop personnel Ning Ning Li told Saipan Tribune that a student of the school, You Yan Zhao, led the project.

"[They] made recycling bags...[and sold] paintings in an exhibition [in China]," she said in an email. "They donated a total of $400 and asked me to help them buy the recycling bins."

The Ocean Plus Saipan Dive Shop, an instructor development center, supports any kind of environmental project, she said.

It was this project that pushed Li to contact Brilliant Star.

"[They are] very involved in educating their students and the public about reducing ocean pollution and being responsible ocean environment stewards," Brilliant Star Montessori School principal Riched Sikkell noted. "With the funds raised, [Li] bought recycling bins to help motivate students on Saipan."

Li used the $400 to buy 10 steel recycling bins for donation.

"Since Brilliant Star School has had a recycling program for the last decade to teach our students the value of reduce, reuse, and recycle, they decided to donate the recycling bins to our school. We are very thankful for their generous donation and we are happy to know that there are other people with a similar mindset and we hope You Yang Zhao and Ocean Plus continue their efforts in creating a healthier environment for everyone," Sikkell added.

FOR NEW, EXISTING CERTAIN PROJECTS

CUC OKs putting up funds for operations, maintenance

By FERDIE DE LA TORRE
ferdie_delatorre@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The Commonwealth Utilities Corp. has agreed with the U.S. government's recommendation for CUC to set up operations and maintenance programs, or O&M, to better ensure that the millions of funds CUC receives from the federal and CNMI governments for projects are spent properly in the future.

The U.S. government, on behalf of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, and CUC have agreed that CUC shall implement O&M activities according to industry standards.

That means CUC shall create, fund, and maintain a separate account to ensure the long-term operation and maintenance of new and existing oil infrastructure.

This will hopefully ensure that infrastructure outlined in court-ordered projects—Stipulated Order No. 2 and the Environmental and the Engineering Management Company order—would continue to operate safely and effectively.

SO2 refers to court-mandated projects that focus on oil issues and apply to oil spills and the remediation of the contaminated power plants.

Under the agreement, beginning on July 31, 2019, and every year after that, CUC shall infuse $475,000 per year to the O&M account for 10 years.

Bradley R. O'Brien, senior lawyer of the U.S. Department of Justice Environmental Protection Section, and deputy attorney general Lillian Ada Tenorio submitted the agreement before the U.S. District Court for the NMI last weekend on behalf of EPA and CUC.

O'Brien and Tenorio said that, at a minimum, the funding must be reserved to address large-scale O&M activities that occur on five-year or 10-year cycles, such as smart piggings and tank inspections.

O'Brien and Tenorio said CUC may augment the O&M account for additional activities but shall maintain the minimum funding level of $475,000 per year.

Under the agreement, CUC shall report O&M account funding, activities, and expenditures to EPA every year.

EPA need not approve O&M account activities but the agency maintains the right to object to any O&M activity.

The parties agreed that EPA and CUC shall evaluate the annual O&M account funding level and budget at least every year to look into any potential need for adjustments to address price increases or additional O&M activities and costs.

The O&M account is a discrete account and shall remain separate from all other accounts and budgets, such as the power generation and distribution budgets.

Earlier, O'Brien told the court that a judicially enforceable mandate should be established requiring CUC to fund, schedule, and implement effective O&M programs for the federal court's two stipulated orders-funded projects.

Carter reserves $275K for inspections of CUC oil pipeline

By FERDIE DE LA TORRE
ferdie_delatorre@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

U.S. District Court for the NMI designated Judge David O. Carter granted Friday a joint request by the U.S. government and the Commonwealth Utilities Corp. to reserve $275,000 for inspections of the CUC oil pipeline.

The $275,000 shall come from CUC's Technical Manager for Oil fund and will be placed in a separate CUC account to be used for the in-line inspection of the pipeline.

In-line inspection, also called intelligent or "smart piggings," refers to an assessment of a pipeline from the interior of the pipe using an inspection tool.

The old pipeline was an aboveground pipe that received fuel from the Mobil Oil facility at the port on Saipan and pumped it to Power Plants 1 and 2 in Lower Base.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency had stated that, unless the old pipeline is repaired or replaced, it poses a threat to the nearby ocean.

An Environmental and Engineering Management Company then constructed a new fuel pipeline at the same location. It became operational in 2016.

In their joint stipulation, U.S. Department of Justice Environmental Enforcement Section senior attorney Bradley O'Brien and CNMI deputy attorney general Lillian Tenorio said that a "smart pig" in-line inspection was conducted in 2018, to ensure that the new pipe meets industry standards and the Stipulated Order No. 2 requirements.

SO2 refers to court-mandated projects that focus on oil issues and also apply to oil spills and the remediation of the contaminated power plants.

O'Brien and Tenorio said the EEMC and the parties agree that the pipeline should be regularly inspected in the future. The next scheduled inspection is in 2023.

CUC agrees to the 2023 in-line inspection "smart pig" analysis and that the results will be reviewed by a third party.

CUC agrees that the $275,000 set aside for this inspection cannot be used for other purposes without the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's approval.

AK urges NMI students to turn in their 'dream car' artworks soon

The opportunity for children to draw their dream car is an opportunity for their ideas and creativity to inspire the automotive world. For the past 12 years, the Toyota Dream Car Art Contest continues to be the doorway for children to illustrate their dreams as well as share their ideas about the future of automobiles.

With the submission deadline for entries just two weeks away, Atkins Kroll encourages students to submit their art pieces to the Toyota showroom on Saturday, Feb. 16, 2019, by 5pm.

Atkins Kroll will hold an exhibition of all entered artworks from Feb. 26, 2019, to March 9, 2019, and will have an awards ceremony for the Top 3 entries in each age category on Saturday, March 9, in the AK Toyota showroom.

The contest is open to students in the following age categories: Under 7 years; 8-11 years; and 12-15 years.

Students are encouraged to create their "Dream Car" using any standard drawing medium (color pencils, crayons, watercolors or markers) on an 11" x 17" paper with a thickness of 5mm maximum. Digital art mediums are restricted. Toyota is looking for hand-drawn colorful artwork that illustrates "My Dream Car."

Worldwide, there will be 30 finalists (10 finalists in three age categories) selected to participate in the global competition. If no one from Guam or Saipan is among the 30 finalists, a representative from both Guam and Saipan will be selected to attend the global competition. Announcements for the selected global finalists will be made in June. The artist and his or her parents will be invited to attend the awards ceremony in Tokyo, Japan in August 2019.

■ Water Interruption: Entire As Matuis, San Roque, Tanapag, and Puerto Rico

■ Wastewater lift station(s) affected: SR-1, SR-2 and SR-3

■ Pole Replacement(s): Three

The purpose of the emergency power interruptions is to de-energize utility lines and allow power line workers from the CUC contracting company, Primary Source Electric, to safely replace five wooden poles with concrete poles in Marpi and As Matuis villages. The emergency power interruption is part of CUC's resiliency program aimed at hardening and strengthening the CUC power distribution system that was affected by Super Typhoon Yutu.

Because of the scale of work that will be performed, CUC asks travelers to take alternate routes or to exercise caution when driving through the working area. (PR)

Be cautious in Afghanistan peace talks with the Taliban

Good news finally has been trickling back from Afghanistan: U.S. and Taliban negotiators may be close to a peace pact in America's longest war. A resolution is long overdue. America invaded in 2001 in response to the 9/11 terror attacks. Afghanistan's Taliban regime had harbored al-Qaida, and the country served as a base for terrorists responsible for the deaths of thousands. The Taliban were routed, and by 2003, then-Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld declared an end to "major combat."

That was almost 16 years ago.

Those years have proven true the warning that Afghanistan always has been a humbler of empires. The Taliban regrouped and fighting continued. Cities were struck with suicide bombings. NATO troops returned to fight in provinces they'd left in triumph. Americans and Afghans alike continue to die.

The U.S. intelligence community's annual threat assessment released last week found a bitter stalemate in the country, with trouble ahead for planned elections. That assessment also indicated that Afghanistan is a crucial crossroads, with larger geopolitical significance given Russia's efforts to play a role in the Afghanistan peace process.

There are no easy answers for Afghanistan. On a shifting battlefield, the Taliban that once sheltered terrorists more recently has clashed with the Islamic State, an enemy the United States has contested elsewhere.

Yet there is a legitimate concern that terror groups could fester again in the country without an American presence. In drafts of a cautious peace pact, the Taliban are said to promise this won't be the case. Enforcement mechanisms on that promise will be key to any deal.

And the deeply patriarchal Taliban regime was a nightmare for Afghan women. The partial liberation of those women has been one of the successes of U.S. and allies' intervention. Women cast ballots in large numbers celebrated by activists and election watchers around the world. The country now even has a national women's soccer team, albeit one with officials accused of sexual abuse. Such tenuous advances show the real challenges ahead with or without American support.

Political consensus on the war and our role in Afghanistan remains complicated. In a bipartisan vote, the Senate rebuked President Donald Trump's effort to withdraw troops from Afghanistan and Syria. Meanwhile, some Democratic presidential candidates found themselves on Trump's side in favor of bringing troops home. That's just the recent state of debate. While caution is warranted, two presidents have now campaigned for and won office on promises to wind down wars that have stretched on for far too long.

Peace and stability must be negotiated, sooner rather than later. The effects of the war reverberate there and here: from the Afghan children maimed and killed by suicide attacks or U.S. and NATO airstrikes, to the families and communities still mourning lost servicemen and women on Long Island and beyond. America cannot remain deeply involved in this country forever.

Virginia governor fiasco puts Dems' troubled racial history on display

The Democratic Party has a mixed legacy on race, to put it charitably. But the lines may never have been set up more favorably for it than today.

That's one reason the controversy over racism in Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam's past is so important, and why his quick departure is so important.

Divisions have not always been as they are today.

In the post-Civil War era, Democrats passed laws to block Republican moves supporting the South's newly emancipated black population. Democratic President Woodrow Wilson re-segregated the federal government. Southern Democrats led efforts against federal civil rights legislation into the mid-20th century.

And even Franklin D. Roosevelt, the greatest Democratic president of the last century, made only minimal moves toward recognizing black Americans' rights, concerned about maintaining his support among Southern lawmakers who provided strong support for his international policies in an era of isolationism.

But on a hot July 1948 night in Philadelphia, Minneapolis Mayor Hubert Humphrey signaled a change that transformed American politics, urging delegates at the Democratic National Convention to "get out of the shadow of states' rights and walk forthrightly into the bright sunshine of human rights."

Since then, the Democratic Party has led efforts outlawing legalized discrimination. The 1954 Supreme Court decision barring school segregation helped mold public opinion, but it galvanized Southern opponents. Republicans, identified from their founding with expanding rights, joined wholeheartedly in passing landmark civil rights measures that climaxed with the 1965 Voting Rights Act, enacted by overwhelming margins over mainly Southern Democratic opposition.

But some Republicans led by 1964 GOP nominee Barry Goldwater wooed white Southerners turned off by the Democrats' stance, prompting President Lyndon Johnson to presciently foresee a political backlash though congressional support for voting rights remained bipartisan. As recently as 2006, Congress extended the law's main provisions by near-unanimous votes, despite growing GOP questions about its scope, which surfaced that year in cautionary comments from Senate Republicans.

After Barack Obama won the presidency in 2008, buoyed by a rising tide of African-American and younger voters, GOP-controlled states began passing new restrictions on voting, such as strict voter ID requirements. In 2013, the Supreme Court, led by a chief justice, John Roberts, who long harbored doubts about the Voting Rights Act, echoed that 2006 Senate GOP report by declaring unconstitutional the key portion requiring states with a history of discrimination to pre-clear voting law changes with the Justice Department.

The court's avowed goal of updating that provision was not unreasonable. But the practical impact of its decision was to kill it, because congressional Republicans showed no interest in fixing the law.

Since then, a wide gap has developed between Democrats seeking to maintain and further the ability of all Americans to enjoy equal voting rights and some Republicans driven by concerns over questionable voter fraud. Republicans in Southern states enacted a variety of restrictive measures, which critics say are aimed at curbing the votes of minorities.

More recently, that gap was illustrated by President Donald Trump's slowness to condemn white supremacists and the contrast between Obama's energetic Justice Department enforcement of voting rights and the exact opposite stance by Trump's Justice Department, starting with its early decision to stop supporting a challenge to the Texas voter ID law.

The gap was exemplified in recent weeks when the new House Democratic majority introduced a measure that, among other things, would revise and update the Voting Rights Act and encourage voting by easing registration and making Election Day a federal holiday. On the day the House Judiciary Committee opened hearings, the top congressional Republican, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, denounced the Democratic proposals as a partisan "power grab."

It is against this backdrop that the totally unexpected controversy erupted over the disclosure of racist imagery on Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam's medical college yearbook page and the virtually unanimous Democratic denunciation of the governor's tone-deaf response, which included volunteering that he put shoe polish on his face in a 1984 depiction of singer Michael Jackson.

At a time the nation's non-white voting population continues growing, the Democrats see both a moral and a practical aspect

Facebook bums us out but we'll pay for it anyway

Would you be better off without Facebook? Would society benefit, too?

A team of economists, led by Hunt Allcott of New York University, has just produced the most impressive research to date on these questions.

In general, the researchers' findings are not good news for Facebook and its users. Getting off the platform appears to increase people's well-being—and significantly decrease political polarization.

Allcott and his co-authors began by asking 2,884 Facebook users, in November 2018, how much money they would demand to deactivate their accounts for a period of four weeks, ending just after the midterm election.

To make their experiment manageable, the researchers focused on about 60 percent of users, who said that they would be willing to deactivate their accounts for under $102.

The researchers divided those users into two groups. The Treatment group was paid to deactivate. The Control group was not. Members of both groups were asked a battery of questions, exploring how getting off Facebook affected their lives.

The most striking finding is that even in that short period, those who deactivated their accounts seemed to enjoy their lives more as a result. In response to survey questions, they showed decreases in depression and anxiety. They also showed improvements in both happiness and life satisfaction.

Why is that? The researchers don't have an answer to that question, but they do show that deactivating Facebook gave people a nice gift: about 60 minutes per day on average. Those who got off the platform spent that time with friends and family, and also watching television alone. Interestingly, they did not spend more time online (which means that contrary to what you might expect, they did not replace Facebook with other social media platforms, such as Instagram).

Getting off Facebook also led people to pay less attention to politics. Those in the Treatment group were less likely to give the right answers to questions about recent news events. They were also less likely to say that they followed political news.

Perhaps as a result, deactivating Facebook led to a major decrease in political polarization. On political questions, Democrats and Republicans in the Treatment group disagreed less sharply than did those in the Control group. (This is not because the groups were different; members of both groups, selected randomly, were equally willing to give up use of Facebook for the right amount of money.) It is reasonable to speculate that while people learn about politics on their Facebook page, what they see is skewed in the direction they prefer—which leads to greater polarization.

At this point, you might be thinking that these findings are absolutely terrible for Facebook. Indeed, those in the Treatment group reported that they were planning to use the platform less in the future—and after the experiment ended, they were doing exactly that.

But here's the rub. After one month without Facebook, the median amount that users would demand to deactivate their account for another month was still pretty high: $87. The U.S. has 172 million Facebook users. Assuming that the median user demands $87 to give up use of the platform for a month, a little multiplication suggests that the platform is providing Americans with benefits: If each user gets the equivalent of $87 in benefits per month, the total amount is in the hundreds of billions of annually.

With that finding in mind, Allcott and his co-authors offer a strong conclusion, one that should provide a lot of comfort to Facebook's executives. The researchers insist that on balance, Facebook produces "enormous flows of consumer surplus," in the form of those hundreds of billions of dollars in benefits, for which users pay nothing at all (at least not in monetary terms).

Maybe that's right—but maybe not.

Recall that those who deactivated their accounts reported that they were better off along multiple dimensions—happier, more satisfied with their lives, less anxious, less depressed. So here's a real paradox: Facebook users are willing to give up a significant sum of money, each month, to make themselves more miserable.

By CASS R. SUNSTEIN

To resolve the paradox, consider two possibilities.

The first is that the important measure—the gold standard—is people's actual experience. When people say that they would demand $87 to give up use of Facebook for a month, they are making a big mistake. The monetary figure might reflect a simple habit (maybe people are just used to having Facebook in their lives), or a prevailing social norm, or even a kind of addiction.

The second possibility is that survey answers about personal well-being—including anxiety and depression—fail to capture everything that people really care about.

For example, Allcott and his co-authors show that Facebook users know more about politics. Those who follow politics might become more anxious and depressed—but a lot of people still follow politics. They don't follow politics to get happy. They follow politics because they are curious, and because they think that's what good citizens do.

Similarly, Facebook users might want to know what their friends are doing and thinking, because that's good to know, whether or not that knowledge makes them happier.

Both of these possibilities undoubtedly capture part of the picture. But let's not lose sight of the most striking implication of the new research: Voluntary use of Facebook (and probably Twitter as well) is making a lot of people stressed and sad. For many of us, deactivating might well turn out to be a gift that keeps on giving.

to maintaining their fervent pro-civil rights positions and condemning deviations. Aside from being wrong, the latter would create problems with the back voters who have become one of the party's largest and most influential factions.

That is especially true in Virginia where voters next November will fill all 140 seats in the Senate and the House of Delegates. The GOP currently holds narrow two-vote margins, and a large minority voter turnout is crucial to Democratic hopes.

Some GOP critics see the degree to which Democrats have championed minority rights in recent years as a crassly political response. While they are right that Democrats see political advantages in their position, it has the added value of being right. That juxtaposition has not always been the way American politicians have approached the issue of civil rights.

Trump has solid US economy for SOTU, but threats remain

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Donald Trump will enjoy the backdrop of a mostly solid economy as he delivers his second State of the Union address Tuesday night, though questions about its sustainability linger.

Trump will likely tout the latest signs of strength: Friday's jobs report showed that employers added the most jobs in January in nearly a year. The proportion of Americans working or looking for work reached a roughly five-year high. And a separate report showed that factory output rose at a healthy clip in December.

Those figures, however, haven't fully erased concerns about an array of headwinds facing the U.S. economy this year.

Several challenges loom: Overseas growth is stumbling, led by weakness in China, the world's second-largest economy. Europe is hamstrung by a recession in Italy and the potential for an unruly Brexit. A trade war between the U.S. and China and higher U.S. mortgage rates, partly engineered by the Federal Reserve, remain threats. The impact of the administration's tax cut may fade. And a 35-day partial government shutdown will likely trim official measures of growth for the first quarter, economists say.

U.S. businesses are defying those headwinds, for now. Many analysts attribute the economy's current health to Trump's tax cuts in late 2017 and a jump in government spending last year, as part of a budget deal between the administration and Congress.

"No other major economy in the world did what we did," said Ethan Harris, global economist at Bank of America Merrill Lynch. "The stimulus did a very good job of covering up all the blemishes of the economy, including the risks of the trade war."

Economic growth reached

3.8 percent last spring and summer, the fastest six-month pace in four years. It also accelerated job gains at a time when many economists expected hiring to slow. With the unemployment rate already low, analysts figured that companies would have fewer unemployed people to hire.

Yet employers stepped up their hiring and drove the unemployment rate down to 3.7 percent in November, the lowest in five decades. It has since ticked up to 4 percent, partly because of government workers who were temporarily unemployed because of the shutdown.

White House officials say the good times will continue. Kevin Hassett, a top administration economist, forecasts that growth will clock in at 3 percent a year for the next decade. He predicts that the administration's corporate tax cuts will entice businesses to invest more in machinery, software and buildings, which will make workers more productive and generate longer-term growth.

So far there is little evidence that that is happening, economists say. After a burst of investment in the first half of last year, companies have since pulled back on spending. Some economists attribute their caution to the administration's trade war with China.

"They're willing to add more people — that's good," said Diane Swonk, chief economist at Grant Thornton, referring to U.S. businesses. But "right now they're not willing to pull the trigger and bet on building more capacity. That undermines your foundation for future growth."

Most economists expect the impact of the tax cuts and extra government spending to fade as the year progresses and for the rate hikes the Fed has already imposed to hold back growth somewhat. Inevitably, too, a prolonged global slump would weaken the U.S. economy as well.

Judge approves massive Puerto Rico debt restructuring deal

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP)—A federal bankruptcy judge approved a major debt restructuring plan for Puerto Rico on Monday in the first deal of its kind for the U.S. territory since the island's government declared nearly four years ago that it was unable to repay its public debt.

The agreement involves more than $17 billion worth of government bonds backed by a sales-and-use tax, with officials saying it will help the government save an average of $456 million a year in debt service. The deal allows Puerto Rico to cut its sales-tax-backed debt by 32 percent but requires the government to pay $32 billion in the next 40 years as part of the restructuring.

Senior bondholders, who hold nearly $8 billion, will be first to collect, receiving 93 percent of the value of the original bonds. Junior bondholders, many of whom are individual Puerto Rican investors and overall hold nearly $10 billion, will collect last and recover only 54 percent.

"Puerto Rico has taken an important step toward its total financial recovery," Gov. Ricardo Rossello said in a statement. "This represents more than $400 million annually that will be available for services in critical areas such as health, education, pension payments, and public safety, in compliance with other obligations."

The deal was previously approved by bondholders but prompted hundreds of people to write and email Judge Laura Taylor-Swain, who held a hearing on the issue nearly three weeks ago, to express concerns about the government's ability to make those payments and the effect it will have on public services. In her ruling, she wrote that she reviewed and carefully considered all those messages before making a decision.

"Many of the formal and informal objections raised serious and considered concerns about the Commonwealth's future ability to provide properly for the citizens of Puerto Rico who depend upon it," she wrote. "They are not, however, concerns upon which the Court can properly act in making its decision ... the Court is not free to impose its own view of what the optimal resolution of the dispute could have been."

The judge said that the deal represents a reasonable compromise and that further litigation would present a "significant gamble" for Puerto Rico. The island is mired in a 12-year-old recession and struggling to recover from Hurricane Maria as the government tries to restructure a portion of its more than $70 billion public debt load.

A U.S. government report issued last year said Puerto Rico's public finance problems are partly a result of government officials who overestimated revenue, overspent, did not fully address public pension funding shortfalls and borrowed money to balance budgets. The Government Accountability Office also reviewed 20 of Puerto Rico's largest bond issuances over nearly two decades and found that 16 were issued solely to repay or refinance debt and fund operations, something many states prohibit.

New Jersey becomes 4th state to approve $15 hourly wage

ELIZABETH, N.J. (AP)—New Jersey became the latest state on Monday to boost its hourly minimum wage to $15 after Democratic Gov. Phil Murphy signed into law a measure phasing in the higher rate over five years.

Murphy signed the bill alongside Lt. Gov. Sheila Oliver and Democratic legislative leaders at a raucous event in Elizabeth where advocates cheered, "Ready for 15," carried banners with their union affiliation and applauded loudly once the bill was signed.

"It is a great day to make some history for New Jersey's working families," Murphy said. "And that's just what we're going to do. We've talked long enough about putting New Jersey on a responsible path to $15 an hour minimum wage. Today we start our way on this path."

New Jersey joins California, Massachusetts, New York and the District of Columbia in phasing in the higher rate. The $15 wage is a prominent policy goal of left-leaning groups, as well as the fulfillment of a key campaign promise by Murphy.

The governor, Senate President Steve Sweeney and Assembly Speaker Craig Coughlin announced a deal on the higher wage last month following yearslong efforts by left-leaning groups and unions in the state to raise the wage.

Republican Gov. Chris Christie vetoed a similar bill in 2016 to raise the wage.

Republicans and many businesses testified during hearings that the higher wage will increase costs and hurt commerce. On Monday, Republican senators raised concerns that it would lead to businesses laying off workers and moving to automation.

Others worried that if a recession hits, the high wage could be untenable for businesses.

"The amount of job loss that we are going to see among small businesses will be tragic," state Sen. Declan O'Scanlon said in a statement.

In an interview, Murphy, the former Obama administration ambassador to Germany, dismissed concerns over automation and said he hasn't seen evidence a higher minimum wage correlates to jobs lost because of artificial intelligence or automation.

He also acknowledged that raising the minimum wage too high too fast could hurt the state's economy, which is why the measure phases it in, he said.

"I start from the basis that you've got full-time work earning poverty wages in 2019 in New Jersey," he said. "There's no excuse that could justify this."

The bill raises the current $8.85 minimum wage to $10 an hour in July, and then increases the rate by $1 in subsequent years until it reaches $15 in 2024—but not for all workers.

Farm workers' wages will climb to $12.50 over five years, for example. Workers for small businesses and seasonal employees will see their minimum wage reach $15 an hour only in 2026. Tipped workers, who currently have a minimum hourly wage of $2.13, will see it climb to $5.13 an hour by 2024.

US prepares to start building portion of Texas border wall

HOUSTON (AP)—The U.S. government is preparing to begin construction of more border walls and fencing in South Texas' Rio Grande Valley, likely on federally owned land set aside as wildlife refuge property.

Heavy construction equipment was expected to arrive starting Monday, U.S. Customs and Border Protection said. A photo posted by the nonprofit National Butterfly Center shows an excavator parked next to its property.

Congress last March approved more than $600 million for 33 miles (53 kilometers) of new barriers in the Rio Grande Valley. While President Donald Trump and top Democrats remain in a stand-off over Trump's demand for $5.7 billion in border wall funding, U.S. Customs and Border Protection has pushed ahead with building what's already funded.

That construction was often described as fencing, and the government funding bill that included construction was supported by some Democrats in the House and Senate. CBP refers to what it plans to build as a "border wall system."

According to designs it released in September, CBP intends to build 25 miles (40 kilometers) of concrete walls to the height of the existing flood-control levee in Hidalgo County next to the Rio Grande, the river that forms the U.S.-Mexico border in

Texas. On top of the concrete walls, CBP will install 18-foot (5.5-meter) steel posts and clear a 150-foot (45-meter) enforcement zone in front.

Maps released by CBP show construction would cut through the butterfly center, a nearby state park, and a century-old Catholic chapel next to the river.

Many landowners oppose a border wall and have vowed to fight the U.S. government if it tries to seize their property through eminent domain. Court fights over condemning land could take weeks if not months.

CBP said in its statement that it intends to start construction on federally owned land. Environmental advocates expect the government to use land that's part of the Lower Rio Grande Valley National Wildlife Refuge.

The refuge consists of dozens of parcels of land purchased over the last 40 years to create a corridor for endangered species and other wildlife.

The Department of Homeland Security can waive environmental restrictions to construct a border wall and issued its waiver for Hidalgo County in October. A coalition of environmental groups has sued DHS over its use of waivers, arguing that wall construction would endanger ocelots, rare birds and other wildlife that rely on refuge land for habitat. That lawsuit is still pending.

Congress last March required CBP not to build in the Santa Ana National Wildlife Refuge after a public outcry. But it didn't exempt the Lower Rio Grande Valley refuge.

"Santa Ana was not a big enough refuge to sustain all the wildlife down here," said Jim Chapman, a longtime resident of the Rio Grande Valley and member of the group Friends of the Wildlife Corridor.

The National Butterfly Center released the text of an email sent by an attorney from the U.S. Department of Justice. The lawyer, Cliff Stevens, says in the email that construction will begin in mid-February "on federally owned land east of Bentsen State Park."

Directly east of Bentsen State Park is a refuge tract called El Morillo Banco, which is between the state park and the butterfly center. DOJ declined to comment on the email, and CBP did not respond to several requests for comment.

Land already in the hands of the government becomes an easier place to start construction quickly, said U.S. Rep. Henry Cuellar, D-Laredo. Cuellar has introduced a proposal that would instruct CBP not to build border walls in several places that have environmental and cultural significance.

"The easiest way, historically, is to go to public lands, because who's going to fight them?" he said.

Protesters were walking Monday along the river levee where CBP intends to start construction. The butterfly center said on Facebook that a local police officer had declared all their property south of the levee to be off limits. The center says it intends to take legal action.

Chapman said that despite months of protests and meetings, he hadn't seen "any attempt" from the U.S. government "to acknowledge and to take the needs of wildlife into account."

"If you were going to design a border wall with maximal impact, you would do exactly what they were doing," Chapman said. "You couldn't do it worse."

Bail set for 3 arrested in death of 7-year-old Wisconsin boy

MANITOWOC, Wis. (AP)—Bail has been set for two adults and a teen arrested in the death of a 7-year-old Wisconsin boy who was allegedly beaten, forced to carry around a heavy log and was buried in snow. The 15-year-old boy charged with first-degree reckless homicide in the death of Ethan Hauschultz of Newton had cash bail set at $150,000 Monday. The Herald Times Reporter says bail for Timothy Hauschultz was set at $100,000 and for Tina McKeever-Hauschultz at $75,000. They were Ethan's court-appointed guardians. The complaint says Ethan died last April after being made to carry a 45-pound log outside for punishment while the other boy allegedly kicked, struck and poked him. The cause of death was ruled to be hypothermia and blunt force injuries to the head, chest and abdomen.

Rare snow falls on Seattle as Midwest thaws from cold blast

SEATTLE (AP)—Winter weather pounded a swath of the U.S. West on Monday, closing schools, delaying flights and turning streets into sledding hills in coastal cities like Seattle that rarely get much snow. Parts of California and Montana braced for the threat of mudslides and avalanches this week, while the Midwest warmed up from a dangerous blast of cold last week that is linked to at least 30 deaths in several states. The Pacific Northwest's first major winter snowstorm hit western Washington hardest, closing numerous schools in Seattle and nearby cities, canceling ferry service, and causing car crashes but no major injuries. Some areas north and east of Seattle got 8 to 10 inches (20 to 25 centimeters) of snow.

1 dead after explosion rocks strip mall in New Mexico

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP)—One person was found dead Monday after an explosion in an alley behind a strip mall in Albuquerque, New Mexico, police said. The cause of the blast was not immediately known. Businesses in the west side mall were evacuated after the early afternoon explosion. No other injuries were reported. Police spokesman Simon Drobik did not immediately release the name of the person who died. He said he did not know if the person was an employee or customer at one of the businesses. Police officers blocked off the mall, which includes a grocery store, pharmacy and other businesses.

Political death watch: Virginia governor weighs his future

Practically all of the state's Democratic establishment—and Republican leaders, too—turned against the 59-year-old Democrat after the picture surfaced late last week of someone in blackface next to another person in a Ku Klux Klan hood and robe. The photo was on Northam's medical school yearbook page.

The sense of crisis deepened Monday as the politician next in line to be governor, Democratic Lt. Gov. Justin Fairfax, denied an uncorroborated allegation of sexual misconduct first reported by a conservative website. Fairfax told reporters that the 2004 encounter with a woman was consensual, and he called the accusation a political "smear."

Protest chants, meanwhile, echoed around Capitol Square. Lobbyists complained they were unable to get legislators to focus on bills. Security guards joked about who was going to be the next governor. Cafeteria workers and members of the cleaning staff shook their heads in wonder. And banks of news cameras were set up outside the governor's Executive Mansion.

Northam stayed out of sight as he met with his Cabinet and senior staff to hear their assessment of whether it was feasible for him to stay in office, according to a top administration official who was not authorized to discuss the matter publicly and spoke on condition of anonymity. The meetings included frank conversations about the difficulties of governing under such circumstances, the person said.

Calls from lawmakers for Northam's resignation seemed to ease Monday. State Del. Lamont Bagby, head of the Legislative Black Caucus, said there was little left to say: "I'm going to let him breathe a little bit, give him space to make the right decision."

The waiting game played out on what was already one of the legislature's busiest days of the session, with the House and Senate each seeking to complete legislation to send to the other chamber.

Finance Secretary Aubrey Layne said he told Northam that the state cannot afford a prolonged period of uncertainty over his future. Northam's office is in the middle of negotiations with GOP lawmakers over a major tax overhaul and changes to the state budget. The Republicans control both houses of the legislature.

"One way or the other, it needs to be resolved," Layne said.

The furor over the photo erupted on Friday, when Northam first admitted he was in the picture without saying which costume he was wearing, and apologized. But a day

PH police: 5 church bombing suspects in custody

MANILA, Philippines (AP)—Five suspected Abu Sayyaf militants accused of involvement in a deadly suicide attack at a Roman Catholic cathedral in the southern Philippines have surrendered to authorities, the national police chief said Monday amid renewed terrorism fears.

Complaints for murder and attempted murder were filed against the five, as well as several other suspected Abu Sayyaf fighters who remain at large, for their alleged role in the Jan. 27 attack at Our Lady of Mount Carmel Cathedral in Sulu province's Jolo town which killed 23 people and wounded nearly 100 others.

Before the bombing, the detained suspects escorted two Indonesians thought to have carried out the suicide attack around Jolo and to a meeting with an Abu Sayyaf commander, Hatib Hajan Sawadjaan, who has been accused of planning and funding the attack, police Director-General Oscar Albayalde said.

Police said the five suspects were led by a suspected local militant identified as Kammah Pae, who has denied involvement.

Defense Secretary Delwin Lorenzana said Pae may have known about the planned attack but was not directly involved, adding that the military will coordinate with police to sort out differences in their findings. Troops were hunting a different suspect, he said.

"Although he has knowledge about the bombing ... he did not actually participate," Lorenzana told reporters, without elaborating.

The attack has renewed terrorism fears across the Philippines. The national police have been placed on full alert and security has been strengthened in churches, shopping malls and other public areas. President Rodrigo Duterte has ordered troops to destroy the Abu Sayyaf, leading to a renewed military offensive in the south that has included air strikes and gunbattles.

The attack has also highlighted concerns that the Islamic State group may be gaining a foothold in Southeast Asia after sustaining major battle setbacks in Syria and Iraq. Local militants aligned with the extremist group laid siege to Marawi city in the southern Philippines for five months in 2017 before they were defeated by the military.

Albayalde said the Abu Sayyaf, a small but violent group based in the jungles of predominantly Muslim Jolo and outlying island provinces, staged the cathedral bombing to gain attention and possible funding from the Islamic State group. The militants also want to foment sectarian conflict between minority Muslims in the south and the country's majority Christians, he said.

The Abu Sayyaf, which has about 300 to 400 armed fighters, has been blacklisted by the United States and the Philippines as a terrorist organization because of years of bombings, kidnappings and beheadings. The commander whom police have implicated in the cathedral attack, Saw-adjaan, is a Muslim preacher who has been linked to ransom kidnappings and the beheadings of hostages, including two Canadian men in 2016.

Citing witnesses to the bombing and statements by some of the suspects, Albayalde said Sawadjaan funded the assembly of the cathedral bombs, which most likely were detonated by an Indonesian man who had hidden in the south for about a year, and an Indonesian woman who only recently entered the south.

Taliban to take part in 'intra-Afghan' talks in Moscow

ISLAMABAD (AP)—The Taliban said Monday they will participate in "intra-Afghan" talks in Moscow designed to bring together prominent Afghan figures, including former President Hamid Karzai, opposition figures and tribal elders—but no Kabul government officials.

The two-day meeting in the Russian capital, which starts Tuesday, is seen as another step in a process aimed at resolving Afghanistan's 17-year war, one that has accelerated since the appointment last September of U.S. peace envoy Zalmay Khalilzad.

Khalilzad has been holding separate negotiations with the Taliban even as he presses for a dialogue that would bring together all key Afghan players.

Afghan President Ashraf Ghani's office criticized the meeting in Moscow, saying that Afghan politicians attending the gathering were doing so "in order to gain power." Ghani's chief adviser, Fazel Fazly, tweeted that it was "regrettable."

Suhail Shaheen, spokesman for the Taliban's political office in the Gulf Arab state of Qatar, confirmed the insurgents' participation. A 10-member Taliban delegation would be led by Sher Mohammad Abbas Stanikzai.

The Taliban have refused to talk to Ghani's government, which they denounce as a U.S. puppet.

A statement released on Monday by Afghans attending the Moscow meeting described it as "the first step toward intra-Afghan dialogue." Along with Karzai, the former president, many of the 38 delegates from Kabul have held prominent government positions. Two presidential hopefuls are among those going to Moscow, including Hanif Atmar, who resigned as Ghani's security adviser last August, apparently over differences with the president.

Also on the list are powerful warlords-turned-politicians and former Taliban insurgents who reconciled with the Kabul administration.

The only woman on the list, lawmaker and activist Fawzia Koofi, has been an outspoken advocate for women's rights and girls' education, once posting pictures of her daughters on her Twitter feed asking the Taliban: "What about my daughters' education?" The Taliban ruled Afghanistan from 1996 to 2001, imposing harsh forms of Islamic law limiting women's education and rights.

Karzai tweeted he was traveling to Moscow with "a message of peace, unity, sovereignty and progress for all of us; the men, women and children of our beloved country."

However, Abdullah Abdullah, the country's chief executive, said the Afghan government should be at the center of any peace talks, adding that Kabul "would prefer the Moscow meeting had a different shape."

In this photo provided by Philippine National Police, Director General Oscar Albayalde, Chief of the Philippine National Police, points to the diagram during a news conference Monday, Feb. 4, 2019 at Camp Crame in suburban Quezon city northeast of Manila, to announce that five suspected Abu Sayyaf militants wanted for alleged involvement in the bombing of a church in southern Philippines have surrendered to authorities.

In year of the pig, Hong Kong has had enough of wild ones

HONG KONG (AP)—It may be the year of the pig, but Hong Kong has had enough of the wild ones.

Authorities in the densely populated financial center are looking for ways to cut down on potentially dangerous encounters between humans and wild boars that have increased as the city's ballooning population expands into former wilderness.

Boars are now frequent sights on roadways, in parks and housing developments and even in shopping centers, and there is concern that the animals have lost their fear of humans.

While the government is pushing for softer measures such as sterilization for the pigs and education for humans who feed them, others say the solution is a full-scale cull of the swine.

The debate about how to handle the wild boars comes as the city of more than 7 million people is being festooned with pig-themed decorations in preparation for the Lunar New Year holiday that officially begins Tuesday. The pig is one of 12 animals that in the Chinese zodiac's 12-year cycle.

Not far from its cramped apartment blocks and neon lights, Hong Kong has plenty of untouched land, traditionally home to a variety of animals, including wild boars. Some areas where homes are close to parks or forests, such as Aberdeen in Hong Kong Island's south, have become popular spots for growing numbers of boars to forage for food amid the garbage cans.

The government's Agriculture, Fisheries and Conservation Department says it doesn't know how many wild boars there are in Hong Kong.

But it has acknowledged a big increase in public complaints about the animals in recent years—from 294 in 2013, to 738 in 2017.

That prompted a review of policy starting last year, which included a halt to hunts by volunteers for boars deemed to be threats to property or public safety.

Instead, the government is extending a policy of sterilizing the animals and feeding them contraceptives, as well as discouraging the public from providing them food. It also captures and tries to relocate wild boars away from residential areas as an alternative to killing them.

However, one local organization, "Wild Boar 70," is lobbying for the renewed culling of the wild boar population.

Other countries with large populations of wild pigs have a policy of controlling them by killing large numbers every year, according to spokesman Wesley Ho.

"Our goal is hopefully to raise public concern about Hong Kong's current problem of wild boar overpopulation, and about exactly what kind of animal these wild boars are," Ho said.

Nations such as France and the U.S. have to deal with large-scale damage to agriculture wrought by feral pigs, largely appealing to hunters as a solution.

Denmark this month began erecting a 70-kilometer (43.4-mile) fence along the German border to keep out wild boars in an attempt to prevent the spread of African swine fever, which could jeopardize the country's valuable pork industry.

Pope in historic UAE visit urges faith leaders to reject war

ABU DHABI, United Arab Emirates (AP)—Pope Francis urged religious leaders Monday to work together to reject the “miserable crudeness” of war as he opened the first-ever papal visit to the Arabian Peninsula, the birthplace of Islam, with a strong denunciation of violence committed in God’s name.

In a keynote speech to an interfaith gathering in the United Arab Emirates, Francis warned that the future of humanity was at stake unless religions come together to resist the “logic of armed power ... the arming of borders, the raising of walls.”

“There is no alternative: we will either build the future together or there will not be a future,” Francis told Abu Dhabi’s powerful crown prince and hundreds of imams, muftis, ministers, rabbis and swamis gathered in the Emirati capital at a time when the UAE-backed Saudi war in Yemen has driven the Arab world’s poorest country to the brink of famine.

“God is with those who seek peace,” Francis added.

Francis’ speech, delivered at the Emirates’ Founders’ Memorial, capped a historic day that began when he arrived at the presidential palace for a welcome ceremony in a tiny Kia hatchback—only to be greeted by an artillery salute and military flyover by a country at war.

Even for a nation known for excess, the Emiratis’ red-carpet welcome was remarkable, especially for a pope who prides himself on simplicity. It featured horse-mounted guards escorting the pontiff’s motorcade through the palace gardens while the flyover trailed the yellow and white smoke of the Vatican flag.

Francis’ speech to the gathering of faith leaders was the highlight of his 40-hour visit to Abu Dhabi. His trip concludes Tuesday with the first papal Mass on the Arabian Peninsula, a gathering expected to draw some 135,000 faithful in a never-before-seen display of public Christian worship here.

Francis’ visit, 800 years after his peace-loving namesake St. Francis of Assisi visited an Egyptian sultan, marked the culmination of years of Holy See efforts to improve relations with the Muslim world after they hit a low during the papacy of Pope Benedict XVI. Since then, religious fanaticism and faith-inspired wars have only grown around the globe.

The Jesuit pope capitalized on his relationship with Sheikh Ahmed el-Tayeb, the grand imam of Egypt’s Al-Azhar, the revered 1,000-year-old seat of Sunni learning, to make the historic trip. They found welcome in the Emirates, which prides itself on its tolerance in a region known for severely restricting religious freedom and is home to a remarkably vibrant Catholic community that by some estimates numbers 1 million faithful in a federation of 9 million.

At the end of the interfaith meeting, Francis and el-Tayeb signed a joint statement on “human fraternity” and their hopes for world peace, and then laid the cornerstones for a new church and mosque to be built side-by-side in Abu Dhabi. The document, in Arabic and Italian, describes itself as being written in the name of “all victims of wars, persecution and injustice; ... and those tortured in any part of the world, without distinction.”

EU nations endorse Venezuela opposition leader over Maduro

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP)—More than a dozen European Union countries endorsed Venezuelan opposition leader Juan Guaido as the country’s interim president Monday, piling the pressure on embattled President Nicolas Maduro to resign and clear the way for a new presidential election.

Maduro stood defiant, rejecting a U.S. offer of humanitarian aid that has shifted attention to Venezuela’s western border with Colombia, where opponents were gearing up to try to bring emergency food and medicine into the country.

“We are not beggars,” Maduro said in a speech to troops broadcast on Venezuelan state TV.

Spain, Germany, France and Britain delivered diplomatic blows to Maduro’s rule by publicly supporting Guaido after a Sunday deadline for Maduro to call a presidential election passed without action. Sweden, Denmark, Austria, the Netherlands, Lithuania, Finland, Estonia, Latvia, the Czech Republic, Luxembourg, Poland and Portugal also lined up behind Guaido, who last month declared himself interim president with the support of the United States and many Latin American nations.

In Canada’s capital, foreign ministers from the Lima Group of 13 Western Hemisphere countries that took the lead in recognizing Guaido as Venezuela’s rightful leader discussed additional steps to pressure Maduro.

Before the closed-door meeting got under way, Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau condemned a “dictatorship willing to use force and fear” to maintain its power. He also announced $53 million in humanitarian aid to support the Venezuelan people.

“We know that the people of Venezuela are facing tremendous hardship and they need our help, as do the countries that have taken in those fleeing violence,” Trudeau said.

The coalition called upon Venezuela’s military to allow badly needed food and medicine across the border and show their loyalty to Guaido. They also urged the United Nations and the international community to step up with humanitarian assistance.

Maduro showed no signs of caving in and lashed out at the EU, accusing it of taking orders from the Trump administration, who he has repeatedly accused of trying to carry out a coup to get its hands on Venezuela’s oil reserves, the world’s largest.

But he stopped short of breaking off diplomatic relations with the 16 European countries that recognized his rival Monday, unlike his swift move to cut off ties with the U.S. after it threw its support behind Guaido last month. A growing list of 38 countries has now recognized Guaido, including non-EU European nations Kosovo, Iceland and Albania.

Long-time backers Russia and China are among at least nine nations that have declared their support for Maduro.

Maduro was especially harsh on fellow socialist and Spain’s Prime Minister Pedro Sanchez, saying he would have “blood on his hands” if Maduro is toppled.

“They gave us an ultimatum, as if Venezuela was being governed from Madrid,” said Maduro, who was addressing troops Monday on the 27th anniversary of the failed military uprising that thrust his political mentor, the late Hugo Chavez, onto the national stage.

Iraqi president hits back at Trump over US army presence

BAGHDAD (AP)—Iraq’s president hit back at Donald Trump Monday for saying U.S. troops should stay in Iraq to keep an eye on neighboring Iran, saying the U.S. leader did not ask for Iraq’s permission to do so. “We find these comments strange,” said Barham Salih, speaking at a forum in Baghdad. Trump’s comments added to concerns in Iraq about America’s long-term intentions, particularly after it withdraws its troops from Syria. Trump has angered Iraqi politicians and Iranian-backed factions by arguing he would keep U.S. troops in Iraq and use it as a base to strike Islamic State group targets inside Syria as needed. In an interview with CBS News’ “Face the Nation,” he said U.S. troops in Iraq were also needed to monitor Iran. “He didn’t ask Iraq about this,” Salih said Monday. He said U.S. troops were in Iraq as part of an agreement between the two countries with a specific mission of assisting in the fight against the Islamic State group and combatting “terrorism.”

He said the Iraqi constitution forbids the use of Iraq as a base to threaten the interests or security of neighboring countries. “Don’t overburden Iraq with your own issues,” he added.

German police catch suspect in Amsterdam watch robbery

BERLIN (AP)—German police say they have caught a suspect over the theft of watches worth some 125,000 euros ($143,000) from an Amsterdam jeweler. Federal police said the 34-year-old Estonian man, whose name wasn’t released, was arrested on Friday evening as he crossed the border hours later after the robbery. They said in a statement Monday that he was picked up in a routine check on a bus traveling from Amsterdam to Berlin as it stopped at a rest area near the Dutch border on the A280 highway. Officers found 14 luxury watches, still with their price tags, and an air pistol in his backpack. Police said the man admitted to carrying out the robbery some five hours earlier. He now faces extradition to the Netherlands.

Avalanche death toll in the Italian Alps rises to 6

ROME (AP)—Rescuers on Monday located the bodies of four skiers in Italy’s Alps, a day after they went missing, raising the death toll in recent avalanches in the country to six. The Valdostano Alpine Rescue aircraft, searching for two British and two French skiers who had gone skiing on Sunday in the Veny valley near the resort town of Courmayeur, spotted three of the bodies in early morning. Later in the day, the Italian news agency ANSA quoted Valdostano Alpine Rescue official Paolo Comune as saying searchers had found the body of the fourth skier, a Polish native who resided in Chamonix, France. On Sunday, two Italian skiers were killed by avalanches—one in the Valle d’Aosta region, the other in the Alto Adige (South Tyrol) region. Authorities had warned that avalanche danger was high in the Italian Alps over the weekend.

SEOUL, South Korea (AP)—As she pursued her dream of becoming a fashion model, veering for years between extreme dieting and overeating, Park I Seul realized she had a problem: She was not tall and skinny, like typical runway models, nor was she big enough to be a plus-size model.

She also realized that the only way to meet South Korea's lofty beauty standards was for her to continuously deny who she truly is.

So Park, 25, began calling herself a "natural size model"—a nearly unheard of term in South Korea—which she defines as someone with the same kind of body you see in daily life, as opposed to a difficult-to-attain ideal. She began to get work, and she started a popular YouTube channel where she introduces fashions for women who look more like her than like the women in fashion magazines.

Her newfound positive view of her body makes her part of a growing movement by South Korean women to resist what they see as extreme pressure to look a certain way.

Hundreds of young women have taken to social media with the hashtag "talcorsset," or take off the corset, to encourage others to free themselves from social stereotypes about their appearance that they feel have long bound them.

Park recently held what she called a "nondiscriminatory" fashion show in Seoul, where models varied in height and weight confidently strode across the stage. Other women have posted online photos or video clips showing themselves cutting their hair short, destroying their beauty products and going to school or work without makeup.

In South Korea, a woman weighing over 50 kilograms (110 pounds) is considered by many to be chubby, regardless of how tall she is.

Park herself is 165 centimeters (5 feet 5 inches) tall and weighs 62 kilograms (137 pounds), which she says puts her far from the minimum 170 centimeters (5 feet 7 inches) and 40 to 48 kilograms (88 to 106 pounds) weight that conventional fashion models have; she's also nowhere near the XL and above sizes demanded for plus-size models.

"I used to think that my fat body wasn't the real me and that living in such a body wasn't my real life. I kept denying myself. I believed that my life would only become happy after I lost weight,"

South Korean women

begin to resist intense beauty pressure

Park said. "I've come to think that I look good enough just the way I am."

South Korea is a deeply conservative country, and experts say its patriarchal society encourages rampant sexism. It had the largest gender pay gap among developed countries in 2017, according to the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, and ranks 115th out of 149 nations in the World Economic Forum's global index of overall gender parity in 2018, among the lowest-ranking G-20 countries.

According to a 2018 survey by Saramin, a leading South Korean recruitment website, 57 percent of human resources managers at South Korean companies agreed that job applicants' appearances influenced their evaluations. The survey also showed that female applicants are more affected by their looks on their job evaluations than male applicants.

As more women begin to embrace feminism, there's also a new willingness to challenge strict South Korean societal demands that force women to take extreme care of their looks, according to Sohn Hee-jeong, a researcher at the Institute of Gender Studies at Yonsei University in Seoul.

Consider, for instance, a video by Cha Ji Won, a 24-year-old YouTuber who runs a channel called "Korean Womyn." The video, which has gotten more than 720,000 views, shows her daily routine after she stopped obsessing over her hair and wearing makeup every day and began choosing and wearing comfortable clothes. It now takes her half the time to prepare to go outside as in the past, and she says she eats whatever she wants and doesn't think about calories.

"I hoped that by letting other women know that there is someone like me, I could remind them that they don't have to care too much (about how they look) and spend so much money and time on their appearance," Cha said in an interview.

The movement can also be found in schools.

An 18-year-old high school senior who wished to be identified only by her last name,

Hong, because of worries about her future studies recently exposed a series of lectures at her all girls' school that promoted a focus on women's appearance as they entered college. The lecture titles included, "Makeup for college freshmen," "Fashion styling for college freshmen" and "How to make a healthy body figure."

Hong objected to her high school recommending classes that appeared to encourage female students to "take care" of their appearance. Hong and some other students contacted journalists to complain about the lectures, prompting the school to remove the classes.

Hong said she put on makeup for the first time when she was in elementary school and was wearing full makeup by high school. She no longer wears makeup and questions why women must always be judged on how they look. However, many children are ashamed of what in Korean is called ssaeng-eol, or bare face, Hong says, and won't go outside without makeup.

South Korea has the world's highest ratio of plastic surgeons per capita, according to a report by the International Society of Plastic Surgery in 2016. According to 2015 statistics by Gallup Korea, about one third of South Korean women between 19 and 29 said they've had plastic surgery.

"I think (South Korean women) want to look perfect," said Park Jiehyun, features director at Cosmopolitan Korea, a popular fashion magazine. "They believe they should have a nice body and skin, beautiful eyes, nose and mouth, and even sleek hair with a perfect hairline. They also want to have good style."

But Park says rising feminist movements and changing values among South Korean women are redirecting her industry's depiction of beauty.

In its December issue, Cosmopolitan Korea featured a popular South Korean comedian, Lee Young-ja, as the cover model. Lee is larger than the typical skinny cover models the magazine uses.

Still, there's often intense beauty pressure at work.

employee at a beverage company, still remembers her boss telling her that she had to work harder because she wasn't as beautiful as a popular South Korean actress.

"Although he said it as a joke, I thought it was ridiculous that he said it when ... my job was unrelated to appearance," Choi said.

Airline companies often demand a stricter dress code for female flight attendants, according to Kwon Su Jeong, a Seoul councilwoman who has worked for Asiana, a major South Korean airline, for 24 years. Kwon is currently on a leave of absence to work in the city council.

"They control everything, from your hairstyle to the color of your lipstick and nails to the length and shape of your earrings," Kwon said.

Although Asiana eased a "skirts-only" rule in 2013, many flight attendants still wear them because of worries of negative performance appraisals, Kwon said. Asiana strongly denied that it makes unfair demands or puts pressure on its employees regarding attire or appearance.

Kwon said the company's upper management wants its flight attendants to uphold an image of a graceful, beautiful Asian woman who provides sincere service to customers. Because the company cares a lot about the appearance of its female employees it puts subtle pressure on them to have cosmetic procedures, she said.

"Although the company is rigid about taking a day off because of injury at work, it is more lenient about taking time off for cosmetic procedures," Kwon said.

Spineless prickly pear offers incredible beauty and texture

By NORMAN WINTER
TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

One year after retiring from the University of Georgia's

Coastal Georgia Botanical Gardens in Savannah I find myself desperately missing cactus. I know what you are thinking if The Garden Guy is writing about cactus, we must get our affairs and lives together as this is a sure sign of the coming apocalypse.

To be honest a hot new vegetable gardening book titled "Grow What You Love" by Emily Murphy got me thinking, not necessarily of vegetables but all things gardening. I use to make fun of people who grew cactus and I feel so ashamed now. No doubt those gardeners were growing what they loved. Now don't get me wrong, my snickering never left the front seat of that car.

At the Coastal Georgia Botanical Gardens, we grew thornless prickly pear in our Mediterranean Garden and the new Sun Garden. It offers the landscape an extravaganza of texture with its large pad and subsequent yellow blooms. I've often said all colors look better combined with lime green and in the case of prickly pear the look of every partner seems to be enhanced. It will stand out at it reaches 3 to 4 feet in height.

We grew it in combinations with dryland bromeliads like Cherry Coke and Silver Nickel, near by were Soap Aloe and Giant Agave. All combined for an eye candy feast of texture. Then there were the flower partners like Mexican Bush Sage, Candy Corn Cuphea and Ragin Cajun Ruellia all looking quite dazzling and at home with the cactus. One of my favorites was the native Georgia Savory not only blooming but also offering a contrasting finer leaf texture.

Botanically speaking the spineless prickly pear is Opuntia. Like many other plants there seems to be small taxonomic skirmish. You'll find Opuntia ellisiana, Opuntia and canapa 'Ellisana'. Most agree we can credit the famous horticulturist and breeder Luther Burbank with the creation.

Note I said most. Varieties like Gravity, Royal, Prolific and Melrose are his releases.

Generically speaking however this cactus is cold hardy from zones 6-10. As you might guess plenty of sun and good drainage are pretty much paramount to your success. You easily imagine them being easy to grow in Texas and the West but I assure you in Savannah they were the proverbial 'Piece of Cake'. At Clemson University in South Carolina, Patrick McMillan has created an envious display of Southwestern species to show you their wide range of adaptability.

The spineless cactus offers the culinary artist at least three opportunities for the kitchen. The pad of the cactus (nopal) can be used like a vegetable while the petals of flowers incorporated into salads. The one you might be most familiar with however is the pear (tuna) which can be treated like a fruit.

As a young adult on a church outing in New Mexico I tumbled down a hillside coming to rest in a prickly pear. This is an experience that will always be remembered. Growing the spineless prickly pear however will be a most pleasant experience with the ultimate reward being beauty of both flower and texture.

Making your own ant bait

Mix one part borax with 3 parts powdered sugar. Fill tiny containers (such as bottle caps) with the bait, and place them where you suspect ants are entering your house. If you see trails of ants, place small containers of the mixture directly in their path.

They will carry the bait back to the nest, unable to differentiate between the borax and sugar, and the borax particles will eventually kill the entire colony.

Keep leaving out bait until no more ants are seen wandering. - Brenda Weaver

Fun moments before, during and after the Oscars luncheon

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP)—Nominees for the 91st annual Academy Awards convened at the Beverly Hilton Hotel Monday for this year's Oscar Nominees Luncheon, a gathering that gives honorees a chance to socialize at an event where everyone's name will be called and they'll get a moment onstage.

That moment is for the "class photo," but the day is so much more. For some nominees, it's the first time they'll meet someone whose work they cherish. Many will do interviews where they can reflect on their films, and look ahead to the Feb. 24 and what they'll wear and who they'll thank.

Here are a few moments from Monday's gathering, both inside the ballroom and in interviews with The Associated Press.

PART OF THE .1 PERCENT

Richard E. Grant is basking in his Oscar nomination, including a joke about him being an "overnight success."

Grant is nominated for best supporting actor for "Can You Ever Forgive Me?," which is his first nomination. He says Steve Martin, with whom he co-starred in "L.A. Story," emailed him Sunday: "Congratulations on your overnight success." Grant cackled with laughter recounting the message.

"I'm one of those actors, like the majority, 99.9 percent of actors, who don't get nominated or awarded things. So that's just the way it is, unless your name is Helen Mirren or Judy Dench or that tiny group of people who always get nominated," Grant said.

"It's all unbelievable."

DEBATING A PRE-NOON COCKTAIL

How early is too early for a cocktail? "Spider-Man: Into the Spider-Verse" writer and producer Phil Lord found himself among the early arrivals to the annual Academy Awards Nominees Luncheon contemplating that very question. With few around to talk to yet, a companion told Lord that she was headed to the bar.

"Oh great idea," Lord said in deadpan with a little laugh. "It's not yet noon, right?"

While the passed champagne and wine may have sat out for a bit when the doors to the Beverly Hilton Ballroom opened at 11, by noon, the nominees and guests were ready to toast.

Lord eventually found some fellow early birds to socialize with, by the way, in "Free Solo" climber Alex Honnold and best actress nominee Glenn Close.

SUPER BOWL SHADE

It's the day after the Super Bowl and Regina King walks through a restaurant at the Beverly Hilton Hotel when she spots a fan in a New England Patriots jersey.

"Congratulations," the effervescent best supporting actress nominee shouts to the man, in a less than enthusiastic tone.

If there are any hard feelings about the Patriots winning the Super Bowl, King certainly doesn't have them for the man wearing the Tedy Bruschi jersey. She stops and shoots a selfie with the man and his companion before heading off to do interviews.

A SPECIAL TIE FOR JENKINS

Barry Jenkins chose his Oscar luncheon attire carefully, pairing a dark suit with bees stitched on it with a burgundy tie.

"I bought this tie when I was broke," Jenkins explained. "Not that I'm not broke now."

And busy. Jenkins was seated at a table Monday that included best supporting actress nominee Rachel Weisz and Disney CEO Bob Iger. He said the conversation turned to hobbies. Jenkins wouldn't divulge how others pass their spare time, but said he didn't have one at the moment. "Right now, I'm just obsessed with work."

Jenkins is nominated for best adapted screenplay for "If Beale Street Could Talk" and explained why he wanted to keep some things around from before he was famous.

He said he always wants "to keep a few things around that predate all this (expletive)."

Barbara Ehrenreich tweets about Marie Kondo widely condemned

NEW YORK (AP)—An online takedown of Marie Kondo by author-journalist Barbara Ehrenreich has been widely condemned as racist and xenophobic. Ehrenreich says it was a joke gone wrong.

Ehrenreich tweeted Monday that she saw Kondo's popularity as a sign of America's decline and wished that the Japanese "de-cluttering guru" would "learn to speak English." She later tweeted that she was "sorry" if she had offended anyone and called her previous comment a missed attempt at "subtle humor."

Ehrenreich is a prominent liberal who writes often about the working class, notably in the best-selling "Nickel and Dimed."

Prize-winning novelist Rebecca Makkai was among those calling Ehrenreich's first tweet racist. She also lamented comments by such fellow liberals as Katha Pollitt, who cited Kondo's speaking Japanese as "adding to her fairy-like delicacy and charm."

Statue of limitations? Facebook draws line over museum nudes

GENEVA (AP)—A Geneva art museum says Facebook prohibited it from promoting an upcoming exhibit with images of two statues—a half-naked Venus and a nude, kneeling man.

The Museum of Art and History took to Twitter to say it had wanted to post pictures of the statues on Facebook to promote the "Caesar and the Rhone" exhibit that opens Friday, but the social media platform "prevented us from it, because of their nudity."

The museum instead put the images on Twitter on Friday with the French word for "censored" over the statues' presumably private parts, adding: "Maybe it's time that this platform changes its policy for museums and cultural institutions?"

Facebook didn't immediately respond to an email from The Associated Press seeking comment.

The museum's 3½-month exhibit pulls together works from the Louvre Museum in Paris, an antiquities museum in Arles, France, and other institutions to convey Caesar's invasion of the Rhone River region running through Geneva and southeast France to the Mediterranean.

The marble statue of "Venus of Arles" was made in the first century and depicts the goddess posed with one arm outstretched and a robe draped around her waist. The first-century B.C. bronze of a bearded captive shows him with his hands seemingly bound behind his back, symbolizing Rome's triumph over Gallic tribes.

Museum of Art and History spokeswoman Sylvie Treglia-Detraz said a first attempt to post the images drew a Facebook response: "We don't allow ads that depict nudity, even if it isn't sexual in nature. This includes the use of nudity for artistic or educational purposes."

The issue strikes at the differing attitudes about nudity in Europe, where topless and even nude beaches and parks aren't unusual, and in the United States, where government officials have been known to cover up topless statues.

Awkwafina, Tina Fey, Jennifer Lopez to present at Oscars

NEW YORK (AP)—Tina Fey, Whoopi Goldberg and Brie Larson will be presenters at the 91st Academy Awards.

The Academy of Motion Pictures Arts and Sciences on Monday announced its first slate of presenters. Also among the 13 stars are Daniel Craig, Jennifer Lopez, Amandla Stenberg and Awkwafina.

Chris Evans, Amy Poehler, Maya Rudolph, Charlize Theron, Tessa Thompson and Constance Wu will also take the Oscar stage as presenters.

There has been some acrimony over exclusive rights to some presenters this year. The Screen Actors Guild earlier criticized the film academy for requiring that its potential presenters not appear at previous awards shows.

ABC will broadcast the Oscars live on February 24. No host has been announced after Kevin Hart stepped down following a backlash over past homophobic tweets by the comedian.

Ginsburg makes 1st public appearance since cancer surgery

WASHINGTON (AP)—Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg is making her first public appearance since undergoing lung cancer surgery in December.

The 85-year-old Ginsburg is attending a concert at a museum a few blocks from the White House that is being given by her daughter-in-law and other musicians. Patrice Michaels is married to Ginsburg's son, James. Michaels is a soprano and composer.

The concert is dedicated to Ginsburg's life in the law.

Ginsburg had surgery in New York on Dec. 21. She missed arguments at the court in January, her first illness-related absence in more than 25 years as a justice.

She has been recuperating at her home in Washington since late December.

Ginsburg had two previous bouts with cancer. She had colorectal cancer in 1999 and pancreatic cancer in 2009.

The justice sat in the back of the darkened auditorium at the National Museum of Women in the Arts.

The National Constitution Center, which sponsored the concert, did not permit photography.

James Ginsburg said before the concert that his mother is walking a mile a day and meeting with her personal trainer twice a week.

The performance concluded with a song set to Ginsburg's answers to questions.

In introducing the last song, Michaels said, "bring our show to a close, but not the epic and notorious story of RBG."

Adam Levine's Super Bowl nipple reveal prompts backlash

NEW YORK (AP)—First, critics panned Maroon 5's Super Bowl halftime performance. Then social media folks went full-on snark over Adam Levine's throw pillow-like tank top design. Then he peeled off the busy brown shirt and the snark turned to outrage over his exposed nipples.

The bare-chested moment Sunday had some feminists and Janet Jackson supporters focused on how male and female nipples are treated differently in life, especially on network TV and by the NFL years after Jackson's career was derailed by a split-second halftime reveal.

"Double standard, much?" is how an InStyle headline neatly summed up the issue in the light of day Monday as the media noted how the hate quickly built online. Singer-songwriter Neko Case aptly captured the mood in an F-bomb-infused tweet likening the frontman to a half-nude greased pig.

Jackson's 2004 wardrobe malfunction, thanks to Justin Timberlake's tug on her bodice, earned CBS a $550,000 Federal Communications Commission fine that was later voided by an appeals court. Levine's nipples enjoyed far more stage time.

A CBS spokesman, Chris Ender, and an NFL spokesman, Brian McCarthy, did not immediately return email requests for comment Monday.

Kimberly Seals Allers, a journalist and breastfeeding advocate, wrote of the male-female double standard on public exposure of nipples in her 2017 book, "The Big Letdown: How Medicine, Big Business and Feminism Undermine Breastfeeding." She was watching the game Sunday and joined the Twitter choir with some research she had done.

Public breastfeeding has become a flashpoint for controversy over exposure of female nipples, from the arrests of women who do it around the globe to restaurants who have banned it.

Interestingly, she wrote, male nipples were also sexualized and banned from public view until men protested, ignited in 1930 when four were arrested in Coney Island for going shirtless on a beach.

"Then Hollywood icon Clark Gable stripped off his shirt in 'It Happened One Night,'" Allers wrote, "marking the scandalous debut of a man's uncensored nipples in American cinema."

In 1935 New Jersey, 42 topless men were arrested in Atlantic City during a demonstration, according to the book. By 1936, however, after ongoing protests, neighboring New York lifted its ban on men going topless and "suddenly a man's nipples were no longer 'obscene' in society but, rather, commonplace and natural," Allers wrote.

Such an effort has been made for women in recent years, spurred on by the 2015 "Free the Nipple" movie and movement, but little headway has been made.

Allers said Monday by telephone that the Jackson controversy was the first thing she thought of when she watched Levine peel off his tank.

"The issue was around the nipple itself," she said of the decades-old bans on topless men. "Clark Gable really did what was considered a very provocative thing in the movie by taking off his shirt and that was the first time," she said. "Ever since then it became very commonplace, versus what happened to women, where their fight to not sexualize their breasts didn't have the same success."

She called it a "trap," and Jackson's Super Bowl moment remains a solid example, Allers said. It's the first thing she thought of when Levine took the show to skin.

"I thought, it must be nice to have that freedom, which women don't have," Allers said. "Janet Jackson is still being punished for that. There's just not the same level of dialogue around men and their bodies."

Oprah offers big stage for Beto O'Rourke's re-emergence

AUSTIN, Texas (AP)—Beto O'Rourke's weeks of near-silence end on a massive stage when he sits down for an interview with Oprah Winfrey.

The appearance Tuesday on "Oprah's SuperSoul Conversations from Times Square" comes ahead of a possible presidential campaign and puts O'Rourke's charisma put to the test.

O'Rourke dazzled Democrats last year by nearly defeating Republican Sen. Ted Cruz in the country's largest red state. But his presidential prospects have been overshadowed more recently with the generally well-received 2020 campaign launches of Sens. Kamala Harris of California, Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts and Cory Booker of New Jersey.

After months of on-again off-again flirtation with a campaign, O'Rourke's supporters say they're ready for some clarity.

"A lot of people have been projecting their own desires to see him run and they're hoping that he will announce on Oprah, which would be so fitting," said Nate Lerner, co-founder of Draft Beto, a group of Democratic activists who are raising money and building a potential campaign infrastructure should O'Rourke run. "I'm hoping he at least does give some indication of where he's at."

Lerner may not even get that much, though. O'Rourke's aides say he is still making up his mind on a White House run and isn't expected to announce a decision during Tuesday's taping.

Still, his association with Winfrey could be helpful if O'Rourke decides to pursue a campaign. Winfrey's endorsement of Barack Obama was pivotal to his 2008 campaign. She also took the rare step of campaigning for Democrat Stacey Abrams ahead of her near-upset in the Georgia governor's race.

Winfrey herself has been the center of 2020 speculation, though she has said she doesn't plan to run.

Her show blurs the line between politics and pop culture. The lineup on Tuesday also features actors Bradley Cooper and Michael B. Jordan and philanthropist Melinda Gates, underscoring the sense of celebrity that surrounds O'Rourke.

The taping comes amid the fallout of a racist photo on Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam's medical school yearbook page. While all of the declared Democratic presidential candidates have demanded Northam's resignation, O'Rourke hasn't commented. That may change if he's pressed by Winfrey.

O'Rourke's low profile in recent weeks has taken curious turns. He treated Instagram followers to a glimpse inside his mouth during a teeth cleaning while trying to decry the Trump administration's border wall. He also recently traveled in Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Kansas and Colorado, but his meandering online posts documenting the journey highlighted things like the open-face roast beef sandwich he had for lunch rather than offering hints about how he'd handle the rigors of a presidential campaign.

AARP film awards for grownups honor Shirley MacLaine

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP)—Have you got a grown-up state of mind? If so, the AARP has some film awards just for you.

For the 18th year, the organization for retired persons and its AARP, The Magazine, have awarded their "Movies for Grownups." The ceremony was held Monday night and will be broadcast Feb. 15 on PBS.

Shirley MacLaine was honored for career achievement and "Green Book" was named best picture/best movie for grown-ups. Glenn Close earned best actress for "The Wife" and Viggo Mortensen best actor for "Green Book."

In addition to recognizing 2018's standout films with unique appeal to "movie lovers with a grown-up state of mind," the awards recognize the "inspiring artists who make them," according to a statement.

Best supporting actress went to Judi Dench for her role as William Shakespeare's wife, Anne Hathaway, in "All is True," a Shakespeare biopic directed by and starring Kenneth Branagh.

The awards, co-produced by the public television series "Great Performances," was hosted by Martin Short.

Other winners include: Richard E. Grant for best supporting actor in "Can You Ever Forgive Me?"; Spike Lee as best director for "BlacKkKlansman"; the Mister Rogers film "Won't You be my Neighbor?" as best documentary; the Alzheimer's story "What They Had," starring Hilary Swank, Michael Shannon and Blythe Danner, as best grown-up love story; and reader's choice — "A Star Is Born."

21 Savage's English origins stun fans of the Atlanta rapper

LOS ANGELES (AP)—It was a shock for fans when 21 Savage was taken into custody by U.S. immigration agents in Georgia. It was an even bigger shock to learn he had been an immigrant in the first place.

The Grammy-nominated rapper and his music are so deeply associated with Atlanta that the notion he was actually born in England and brought to the U.S. at age 12 felt downright bizarre.

Scores of surprised tweets came after his Sunday arrest. Memes bloomed that some called cruel under the circumstances, including one of him dressed as a Buckingham Palace guard, along with an old video of him talking in a mock English accent about tea and crumpets.

"It seems so outlandish that the prototypical Atlanta rapper is not from Atlanta," said Samuel Hines, a writer and editor at GQ who researched 21 Savage and spent a day with him for a profile in the magazine last year. "I think that's why so many people were sort of making fun of him, and making memes."

By all accounts, few knew his real birthplace, and it certainly wasn't publicly known. His accent gave no indication, and his birth name, Sha Yaa Bin Abraham-Joseph, could come from any number of birthplaces.

"I certainly heard no whispers challenging his accepted backstory," Hine said.

Abraham-Joseph was detained in a targeted operation in the Atlanta area and put in deportation proceedings, U.S.

Customs and Immigration Enforcement spokesman Bryan Cox said.

Abraham-Joseph's attorneys said U.S. immigration officials have known his status at least since 2017, when he applied for a new visa. That application is pending, and his attorneys say he should not be detained.

Both sides agree that Abraham-Joseph came to the U.S. as a child in 2005, and he stayed in after his visa expired in 2006.

"He, like almost two million other children, was left without legal status through no fault of his own," Kuck Baxter Immigration, the law firm representing Abraham-Joseph, said in a statement Monday, adding that he now has U.S. Citizen children of his own.

Super Bowl reaches 100.7 million people, down from 2018

PASADENA, Calif. (AP)—The New England Patriots' competitive but action-starved Super Bowl victory over the Los Angeles Rams was seen by 100.7 million people on television and streaming services, the smallest audience for football's annual spectacle in a decade.

A boycott by disgruntled New Orleans Saints fans, a campaign by fans of quarterback Colin Kaepernick and a game with only one touchdown combined to shrink the audience. On CBS alone, the game was seen by 98.2 million people, compared to 103.4 million who watched on NBC last year, according to the Nielsen company.

Since reaching a peak of 114.4 million viewers for the Patriots' 2015 victory over the Seattle Seahawks, the Super Bowl audience has slipped each year since. The Super Bowl is traditionally the most-watched television event of the year in the U.S., and its audience hadn't dipped below 100 million since the Pittsburgh Steelers-Arizona Cardinals game in 2009.

CBS dealt with a city that held a major grudge. Many fans in New Orleans, where the hometown Saints were victimized by a blown referee's call toward the end of its loss to the Rams in the NFC championship, skipped the game entirely. Preliminary ratings from New Orleans showed that Super Bowl viewership this year was half what it was in 2018.

New Orleans' Times Picayune newspaper printed a mostly blank front page on Monday with the words, "Super Bowl?" What Super Bowl?

The newspaper asked, "you think the NFL is sad that the Saints weren't in it to spice up the night?"

There was also a campaign on Twitter by people who said they would not watch the game because of Kaepernick, the former San Francisco 49ers quarterback who hasn't been able to land a job in the NFL since leading demonstrations in protest of police treatment of minorities.

Liam Neeson admits he wanted to kill after friend was raped

LONDON (AP)

— Liam Neeson has said he is ashamed to admit he had violent thoughts about killing a black person after learning that someone close to him had been raped. In an interview published Monday, Neeson said that after being told the attacker was black, he "went up and down areas with a cosh (stick or truncheon)" hoping a black person "would come out of a pub and have a go at me about something, you know? So that I could kill him."

"It took me a week, maybe a week and a half, to go through that," Neeson said.

Many social media users expressed shock at his admission, accusing Neeson of racism.

The Northern Ireland-born

actor recounted the story in an interview with The Independent while promoting his new thriller "Cold Pursuit," about a father who seeks violent revenge for his son's death.

He said the incident happened some time ago.

Neeson, 66, called his reaction "horrible," saying it taught him a lesson about the "primal need" for revenge.

Neeson, who grew up in Northern Ireland during the decades of violence known as the Troubles, said: "I understand that need for revenge, but it just leads to more revenge, to more killing and more killing, and Northern Ireland's proof of that."

Neeson's publicist didn't immediately respond to a request for comment.

Vegas artist sues Ariana Grande over 'God is a Woman' image

LAS VEGAS (AP)—A Las Vegas artist is suing pop music star Ariana Grande, alleging federal copyright infringement over an image of a woman in a candle flame in the pop star's widely-viewed "God is a Woman" music video.

Representatives for Grande did not immediately respond Monday to messages about the lawsuit filed Thursday in U.S. District Court in Nevada by attorneys for Vladimir Kush and his company Kush Fine Arts

Las Vegas.

The lawsuit calls the image that appears a little more than a minute into Grande's 2018 music video nearly identical to paintings that Kush painted and copyrighted in 1999 and 2000.

Kush seeks unspecified monetary damages and a court order to remove the video from the internet.

The four-minute video has been viewed almost 200 million times on YouTube since it was posted last July.

Banksy painting that self-destructed displayed in Germany

BERLIN (AP) — A Banksy painting that shocked onlookers as it partially shredded itself after being sold at auction is going on display in Germany.

The Frieder Burda museum in Baden-Baden said Monday that "Girl with Balloon," which self-destructed last year after an unidentified European collector successfully bid $1.4 million at a Sotheby's auction, will be shown from Feb. 5 through March 3.

AP

The shredded Banksy painting "Love is in the Bin" is being exhibited at the Museum Frieder Burda in Baden-Baden Monday Feb. 4, 2019, where the work will be shown from Feb. 5 to March 3, 2019.

The painting, retitled "Love is in the Bin" after the shredding, will then be moved to the Staatsgalerie Stuttgart museum on permanent loan.

Demi Lovato deletes Twitter account over 21 Savage backlash

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Singer Demi Lovato has deleted her Twitter account following criticism that she was laughing at memes about 21 Savage.

The Grammy-nominated rapper was taken into federal immigration custody in the Atlanta area early Sunday. An official says the rapper is a British citizen who overstayed his visa and is also has a felony conviction.

Lovato had tweeted: "So far 21 savage memes have been my favorite part of the Super Bowl." She later clarified she wasn't laughing "at anyone getting deported."

The rapper Wale tweeted

Lovato

he didn't get the joke and rapper Migos wrote it wasn't funny.

Some users thought it was wrong for others to criticize Lovato, who was hospitalized in July following a drug overdose.

Three's too crowded for wife in shades of grey's marriage

DEAR ABBY: I've been married to my best friend for nine years. We have our ups and downs, but we're generally happy. When "Fifty Shades of Grey" came out, I told him I was interested in exploring that scene. He was thrilled because he's always been in the lifestyle but was afraid to scare me away.

Fast forward four years: I no longer wish to be part of it. It's not for me. I agreed to have a live-in submissive with the understanding that she leaves if I say so. But he's now calling me selfish for suggesting it be only the two of us. He has no intention of ever changing it.

She helps him with his company, which is also lifestyle-related, and claims he can't do it without her. Their relationship is nonsexual. Am I selfish for wanting a normal marriage again? He gave me the master bedroom to myself and says that's the compromise and I need to let him be him. What's your opinion?

WRONG TURN IN HOUSTON

DEAR WRONG TURN: Wait a minute! If your husband can't run his company without this woman, then I have to wonder who is the submissive.

If sleeping in an empty master bedroom while he sleeps in another and has a "nonsexual" relationship with this person is what you want for your future, you wouldn't be writing to me. You asked for my opinion, and here it is: Let your husband be himself, permit yourself to be YOURSELF and while you're doing that, consult a divorce lawyer.

DEAR ABBY: I have a really bad fear of babies and toddlers. My brother's wife just had a second child, and I can't stand being around them. I get really bad anxiety, so I avoid them. His first child is 8, but she is disabled and is like a toddler. I get freaked out around her, too.

When they come over, I go outside or into my room and hide. On top of that, my sister is pregnant and living here with me and our parents. I'm only 17, so I can't move out. It's hard enough when my brother visits with his kids, but if one lives with me, I know I'm gonna lose it. I'm too afraid to talk to my parents about this.

LOSING IT IN THE WEST

DEAR LOSING IT: You are NOT going to lose it. You ARE going to talk with your parents about this because you cannot keep hiding in your room forever. The longer you do, the higher your level of anxiety will become.

Have you any idea why you feel the way you do about babies and toddlers? Is it their size, their fragility, the sound of their voices? You may need help from a licensed therapist to get past this. (Some individuals do.) It's important that you understand what is driving this panic because, if you don't, you will find yourself increasingly isolated as your friends and relatives start families.

DEAR ABBY: Our high school-age daughter has a great group of friends. They often spend the night at each other's houses for sleepovers. It's usually two to four girls sharing rooms and beds. My dilemma is that one of her friends is a gay boy. She asked if he could stay over. After some thought, our response was that he could, but in a separate bed. What would your answer have been?

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: Charlie Heaton, 25; Rick Astley, 53; Kathy Najimy, 62; Tom Brokaw, 79.

Happy Birthday: Take your time and systematically initiate changes you want to make. You have plenty to gain if you are willing to work hard and follow through with what you want to see happen. Reconnecting with old friends will help you put your life in perspective and prompt you to consider making a move or taking on a new project. Your numbers are 2, 9, 15, 29, 33, 38, 42.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): If you feel compelled to make a change, look for a way to alter your appearance without attracting a lot of attention or visit a place you've never been. Don't share personal information or secrets. ★★★

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Consider what you can do for others. Lending a helping hand will encourage better relationships. If you love someone, let them know how you feel. Make plans that will give you something to look forward to. Romance is highlighted. ★★★★★

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Stick to the truth, and hang out with people who aren't excessive or who ask for too much. Balance and integrity will help you get ahead and ward off trouble. A personal change will help you financially. ★★

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Don't worry so much about what others do or think. Do your own thing and enjoy life and those who fit into your plans. It's OK to be unique and to follow the path that feels most comfortable. Romance is featured. ★★★★★

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Look for a unique way to use your skills. A little will go a long way if you use precision and detail to make what you have to offer stand out. An unexpected change will turn out to be a blessing in disguise. ★★★

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Dreams can come true if you make plans and follow through. You don't have to spend a lot to have a good time. Look for simple but effective ways to reach your objective. Romance is on the rise. ★★★

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be careful what you wish for. Changes made can upset someone close to you. Make sure you get the go-ahead before you put your plans in motion. Think matters through, find out where you stand and proceed with confidence. ★★★

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Talk less and do more. If you really want to keep the peace, be sure to live up to your promises. An interesting development will improve your living conditions. Romance will bring you closer to someone you love. ★★★★★

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Make changes that make sense. Don't let anyone sidetrack you or convince you to do something that is extravagant. Stay in control, and make a point to be a leader, not a follower. ★★

With surgical precision, Pats cause a whole lot of pain

ATLANTA (AP)—There's something surgical about the Patriots' dynasty that has made the rest of the NFL reel for nearly two decades.

They are 6-3 in Super Bowls in Bill Belichick's reign and with Tom Brady doing the clutch work. Yet the overall points for those games, dating to 2002, stand at 215 for New England, 201 for the opposition.

No blowouts.

They began this unprecedented run using a bruising defense that turned the Rams' Greatest Show on Turf into a tentative outfit that at times looked intimidated 17 years ago. On Sunday night, they brought it all full circle with a masterful defensive performance that humbled the Rams once more, even more so.

The Patriots take down opponents in the most painful ways, whether in shootouts like against Carolina and Atlanta, or in comebacks — Atlanta again, and Seattle. While it's always foolish to get into a tit-for-tat scoring binge with Brady, the 13-3 victory over Los Angeles proved the Pats can do the dirty work, win in the trenches and still survive.

It's maddening for the rest of the NFL. It's maddening for so much of America that wants to see someone—anyone else—shut down this show. It leads to Patriots haters noting that one of the worst officiating errors in NFL history cost the rightful NFC champions, the Saints, a shot at New England. Or that coin tosses have handed the Patriots the ball in a Super Bowl and a conference title game overtime, and eventually they were lifting the Lombardi Trophy.

No matter where football fans outside the New England base turn, however, the finish often hurts.

Why?

Wide receiver Chris Hogan, who has been to Super Bowls in all three of his seasons in New England, explains it well.

"We have been in these situations so many times before in big games and we don't really blink," Hogan said. "We practice these situations, we run these situations, we know how to execute in these situations—that is what it comes down to. Four-minute drives and trying to end a football game, take care of the ball, run blocking and doing all of the fundamentals when it really counts. And we have been in this situation before and it just helps."

The Patriots have been in every position before. So when they need to rely on Brady to light up the scoreboard, they can. And if the game environment calls for grinding it out, they can.

One thing they never do is back off. In their losses to the Giants and Eagles in the Super Bowl, the Patriots remained aggressive. So did the opponent, though, and New York and Philadelphia simply made more key plays. Perhaps only one more key play, but that was enough.

When the Seahawks and Falcons lifted off the accelerator—or made unwise strategic moves—New England swooped in.

The decisive drive in the fourth quarter Sunday night was typical of the clinical manner in which they keep winning. Sloppy, particularly on third downs, and even a tad frustrated by the 3-3 score, they put together a classic drive: five plays, four of them passes, for 69 yards, capped by rookie Sony Michel's 2-yard touchdown run.

Brady went to his meal tickets and they ate up an LA defense that had been relatively staunch. An 18-yard pass to Rob Gronkowski, followed by 13 yards to game MVP Julian Edelman.

Then a 7-yarder to Rex Burhead led to a play that causes every defensive coordinator to lose sleep: Gronk going deep and overpowering as well as outreaching defenders—in this case double coverage—for 29 yards to the 2.

Once Michel scored, it seemed inevitable the Rams would find nothing but disappointment the rest of the way.

Leave it to Gronkowski to sum up what at some points looked like a so-so season for the Patriots. Yet there they were, at the summit again.

"I'll tell you this, it was the most satisfying year I've ever been a part of," said the star tight end who just might have played his last game; he's contemplating retirement, as he did last year before returning. "How we came together, the obstacles we had to overcome, the grind from the beginning of training camp to now. That was our identity; wear the other team out.

"We weren't making big, flashy plays all the time ... but we stuck together, we grinded, ran the ball.

"Now we're Super Bowl champions, we're world champions."

And the rest of the NFL writhes in pain.

McVay looks to future after Rams' ride derails in Super Bowl

ATLANTA (AP)—Sean McVay has had very few bad days during his two seasons in charge of the Los Angeles Rams. His coaching tenure had been a rocket ride all the way to the Super Bowl.

Until Bill Belichick sent this bright football mind and his exciting team plummeting back to Earth.

What McVay does about it will determine whether the Rams are still an ascending powerhouse or another NFL contender broken by the New England Patriots.

After Belichick's defense turned McVay's offense into the worst version anyone had ever seen, the Rams' 33-year-old offensive guru was visibly frustrated and embarrassed. His clenched jaw in postgame interviews also signified a determination to never let it happen again.

"The thing that is so tough about all of this is the finality to it," McVay said Sunday night after his Rams failed to score a touchdown for only the second time in his 36 games in charge. "Usually, if you go through some adversity, you get a chance to bounce back right away. This one is going to stick with you. It just stings in your gut. I'm still kind of numb right now, but I have so much love for these players and these coaches. That's where it really eats at you, because you feel like you didn't do your part to help them achieve success.

"This is going to be a very humbling, tough one that you learn from. But you have to demonstrate that mental toughness you talk about, and that is all I know how to do."

McVay could have been speaking partly to convince himself after he coached only the second team in 53 Super Bowls to fail to score a touchdown. The wunderkind's confidence appeared to be shaken to its core by a New England defense that held the 11th highest-scoring team in NFL history to 260 total yards, six first downs in the first three quarters and their fewest points in McVay's era.

"It's embarrassing," left tackle Andrew Whitworth said. "It stings to play that way. You'd almost rather score a ton and lose that way, but that would take away from what the defense did. They gave us every opportunity to win."

McVay thrives on X's and O's, and he will have six months to scheme new ways to attack the similar zone defenses used late in the year by Detroit, Chicago and New England to throttle the Rams' passing game. He also will endeavor to teach Jared Goff to make better decisions under pressure after the young quarterback's stinker of a Super Bowl.

General manager Les Snead has big calls to make on soon-to-be free agents and roster vacancies. The Rams will return with a wealth of talent, but they must determine whether their 4-3 record in their final seven games was a sign of bigger flaws.

CINCINNATI (AP)—After 16 years without a playoff win under Marvin Lewis, the Bengals decided to try something different. But they had to wait more than a month before hiring Zac Taylor as their next coach in hopes of ending a long streak of futility.

Taylor's already been in town enough to know the history.

The Rams quarterbacks coach reached a deal Monday a few hours after LA's

With wait over, Bengals hire Zac Taylor as coach

13-3 loss to the Patriots in the Super Bowl at Atlanta. Cincinnati had to wait until after the title game to make his hiring official. The Bengals and Dolphins were the last two teams to fill head coaching vacancies, with Miami getting the Patriots' Brian Flores.

After three straight losing seasons and 28 years without a playoff victory, Cincinnati joined the latest wave—turning to a young, offensive-minded coach.

"Zach is a bright coach with an offensive mind and background, which is important to have in today's NFL," owner Mike Brown said in a statement. "And he's young. He embraces new ideas and new ways to do things, which will be a good thing for us."

Taylor is the Bengals' youngest head coach since they hired Dave Shula at age 32 in 1992. Shula went on to lose 50 games faster than any coach in NFL history, finishing 19-52.

Flores goes from Super Bowl champ to Dolphins coach

In Florida, hours after his team won the Super Bowl, New England Patriots linebackers coach Brian Flores was hired Monday as head coach of the Miami Dolphins.

Flores helped the Patriots shut down the high-scoring Los Angeles Rams, and then flew to Miami to seal his deal with the Dolphins.

"It has been a whirlwind 24 hours," Flores said with a smile at a news conference that drew two dozen cameras.

"Looking at this crowd here, you'd think we won the Super Bowl," Miami owner Stephen Ross said.

Flores was the first person the Dolphins interviewed after they fired coach Adam Gase on Dec. 31. They decided on Jan. 11 to offer the job to Flores, the Patriots' defensive play-caller, but had to wait until New England's season ended to complete an agreement.

Ball included in 6-player deal for Davis

LOS ANGELES—Trade talks between the Los Angeles Lakers and New Orleans Pelicans revolving around Anthony Davis are reportedly heating up.

On Monday, Adrian Wojnarowski of ESPN reported the Lakers have increased their offer to the Pelicans to include “multiple young players, multiple draft picks and Pelicans salary-cap relief” as they continue their hot pursuit of the superstar big man.

Both Wojnarowski and Shams Charania of The Athletic and Stadium reported Davis would consider signing a long-term extension with the Lakers, New York Knicks, Los Angeles Clippers and Milwaukee Bucks, which perhaps limits his trade market to those teams.

Any other organization that trades for him would run the risk of Davis leaving as a free agent after the 2019-20 season. On the other hand, getting the chance to sell him on a culture, roster and coaching staff for a season-and-a-half might be worth the risk for contenders.

Plus, it’s hard to imagine the Clippers, Knicks or Bucks offering an appealing trade package. The Bucks could build a deal around Khris Middleton, but he’s due to be a free agent after this season and could sign elsewhere, leaving the Pelicans high and dry.

Ditto for Tobias Harris and the Clippers, and it’s fair to wonder whether the Clippers have enough appealing assets to get the deal done either way.

While the Knicks could potentially offer the best possible deal over the summer, that’s contingent on them winning the NBA draft lottery, thus giving the Pelicans the opportunity to select Zion Williamson. Until the lottery, any deal with the Knicks would not only be a major risk but also illogical, since Davis would improve New York and lessen the likelihood of the Knicks finishing with the best possible lottery odds.

If the Pelicans insist on moving Davis by Thursday’s trade deadline, the Lakers can offer the best possible deal (barring a surprise mystery team emerging). The Lakers could build a package around some combination of Lonzo Ball, Kyle Kuzma, Brandon Ingram, Ivica Zubac, Josh Hart and draft picks.

While the Pelicans could potentially get more from the Knicks or the Boston Celtics over the summer—Jayson Tatum would easily trump any of the Lakers’ young players, while the Celtics also have a treasure trove of future picks—the Celtics weren’t among the teams Davis would reportedly be willing to sign with long term. Other factors could limit what Boston is willing to offer, too.

Heat to retire Bosh’s jersey

In Miami, Chris Bosh, who had arguably the biggest rebound and assist in Miami Heat history, will have his No. 1 jersey retired by the franchise on March 26.

The Heat made the announcement Monday.

Bosh played parts of six seasons in Miami, before his career was cut short by recurring issues with blood clots. He last played for the Heat in 2016.

Bosh helped Miami reach the NBA Finals four times and win championships in 2012 and 2013. He grabbed a rebound and tossed the ball out to Ray Allen for a game-tying 3-pointer with 5.2 seconds left in regulation of Game 6 of the 2013 NBA Finals against San Antonio, a game that the Heat would win in overtime to force Game 7.

Alonzo Mourning, Tim Hardaway and Shaquille O’Neal are the other Heat players to have jerseys retired. Dwyane Wade, Udonis Haslem and LeBron James will likely receive the same tribute in the coming year.

NEW YORK (AP)—They already had the NBA’s best record, so Giannis Antetokounmpo knew the Bucks were a good team.

A powerful finish to a five-game road trip showed him they might be even better than that.

“To finish our road trip with four wins in a row says a lot about this team and how great it can be,” Antetokounmpo said.

Antetokounmpo had 30 points, 15 rebounds and nine assists, and Milwaukee beat the cold-shooting Brooklyn Nets 113-94 on Monday night.

The injury-depleted Nets missed 19 of their first 20 3-point attempts, making it another easy night for the team with the league’s top record. Brooklyn finished 5 for 42 (11.9 percent) behind the arc and had its nine-game home winning streak snapped.

Malcolm Brogdon added 16 points and Eric Bledsoe had 15 for the Bucks, who won their fourth straight—all by double digits—after dropping the first game of the trip in Oklahoma City.

The teams entered with the two best records in the East since Dec. 7, with the Bucks coming in 22-6 and Brooklyn 20-8. But the Nets were minus a lot of the firepower that produced that strong stretch.

“Brooklyn’s really banged up so it’s almost not fair, but for us at the end of a road trip it’s a good win,” Bucks coach Mike Budenholzer said.

D’Angelo Russell scored 18 points for the Nets, who have been forced to go deep down their roster because of injuries and lost their third in a row.

Brooklyn shot 32 percent overall while playing without Caris LeVert, Spencer Dinwiddie, Joe Harris, Jared Dudley and Allen Crabbe, all either starters or key reserves.

Rockets 118, Suns 110

In Phoenix, James Harden scored 44 points, his 20th 40-point game of the season, and Houston handed Phoenix its 11th straight loss.

Harden joined Wilt Chamberlain, Michael Jordan and Rick Barry as the only NBA players with 20 games of at least 40 points in the first 50 of a season.

Harden, who also had eight rebounds and six assists, extended his streak of games with at least 30 points to 27, third-longest in NBA history.

Chris Paul scored 18 and Kenneth Faried had 17 points and 14 rebounds for the Rockets, who were without two starters.

Josh Jackson scored 25 points for the Suns.

Pistons 129, Nuggets 103

In Detroit, Andre Drummond scored 14 of his season-high 27 points in the third quarter and Detroit snapped Denver’s six-game winning streak.

Detroit blew a 25-point lead in a loss to the Los Angeles Clippers on Saturday, but the Pistons poured it on this time. Blake Griffin added 17 points for Detroit, and Reggie Jackson scored 14.

Trey Lyles had 20 points for the Nuggets, who dropped out of a tie with Golden State for the best record in the Western Conference.

Denver was without forward Paul Millsap, sidelined by right ankle soreness, and the Nuggets were also missing Gary Harris (right adductor strain) and Jamal Murray (left ankle sprain).

Kings 127, Spurs 112

In Sacramento, rookie forward Marvin Bagley III had a career-high 24 points and 12 rebounds for his third straight double-double, leading Sacramento past San Antonio for its seventh straight home win.

De’Aaron Fox added 20 points and Buddy Hield scored 18 to extend Sacramento’s longest home winning streak since a 14-gamer in 2005-06. That was the last time the Kings made the playoffs, but Sacramento (28-25) is positioned to make a run at a postseason spot this season. The Kings trail the Los Angeles Clippers by a half-game for eighth place in the Western Conference.

DeMar DeRozan had 24 points and LaMarcus Aldridge added 22 for the Spurs, who lost the opener of their annual eight-game rodeo road trip.

Hawks 137, Wizards 129

In Washington, Taurean Prince scored 12 of his 21 points in the fourth quarter and hit five of Atlanta’s 20 3-pointers against Washington.

Rookie guard Kevin Huerter added 19 points and also hit five 3s in his return to the region where he played college ball at Maryland. Two of those 3s came during an early 16-2 run that put the Hawks up 28-16 late in the first quarter, a lead they did not give back.

Vince Carter scored 16 points in 16 minutes after halftime. John Collins had 15 points and 11 rebounds despite exiting at the break with a cut on his face.

Trae Young added 10 points and 10 assists as nine Hawks reached double figures. Atlanta finished 20 of 41 from beyond the arc to close a 4-3 road trip.

Bradley Beal had 18 of his 27 points in the fourth for the Wizards, who slipped into a 10th-place tie with Orlando in the Eastern Conference playoff race, three games back of eighth-place Miami.

Pacers 109, Pelicans 107

In New Orleans, Darren Collison capped a 22-point performance with a 3-pointer, a 20-foot jumper with the shot clock winding down and a free throw during the final two minutes as Indiana held off depleted New Orleans.

Domantas Sabonis had 16 points and 13 rebounds, and Myles Turner added 15 points and nine rebounds for the Pacers, who won their second straight.

The Pelicans, playing without five of their most productive players—including disgruntled All-Star Anthony Davis—have lost three straight. Each loss has been by six or fewer points to teams currently occupying playoff positions in the standings.

Jahlil Okafor had 25 points and 13 rebounds for New Orleans. Jrue Holiday added 19 points, 11 rebounds and nine assists.

Saipan Little League Baseball, Inc. is calling all managers of teams interested in competing in the Minor and Majors divisions to attend a meeting on Feb. 9.

The meeting is set for 10am at the Department of Public Land's ground and transportation office in Lower Base.

With the massive damage caused by Super Typhoon Yutu at the Oleai Sports Complex, SLLB is planning to hold competitions only for the two divisions. Junior and Senior League games are played at the Francisco "Tan Ko" Palacios Ballfield, which unfortunately will not be available this year, while SLLB officials may look for alternative venues if the Miguel "Tan Ge" Basa Pangelinan Ballfield will be unplayable this season.

For more information about the meeting, contact Mike Borja at 322-9498. (PR)

Completing the China squad is non-playing captain Wei-Guang Yang.

The favored team will go up against Pacific Oceania today at the National Tennis Centre with the former bannered by world No. 342 Abigail Tere-Apisah of Papua New Guinea. Tere-Apisah is the only active pro player on the crew of Pacific Oceania captain and Tahiti's Gilles De Gouy. Steffi Caruthers of Samoa played in the Fed Cup Group II tie last year, but last competed in the pro ranks in 2017, while PNG's Violet Apisah just graduated from the ITF Juniors and had her last event in September during the US Open Juniors. Lee is still playing in the ITF Juniors Circuit and the youngest member of the team at 17. The Commonwealth player started the 2019 with an appearance in the main draw of the Australian Open Juniors in Melbourne.

After today's game (two singles and one doubles), Lee and company will face South Korea tomorrow, while their last match in the pool is against Indonesia. South Korea's roster is made up of players Na-Lae Han, Su Jeong Jang, Sunam Jeong, and Na Ri Kim, and captain Young-Ja Choi, while Indonesia has Beatrice Gumulya, Aldila Sutjadi, Deria Nur Haliza, Jessy Rompies, and captain Deddy Tedjamukti.

The top finisher in each pool will battle for the ticket to the World Group II playoffs that will take place in April, while the third placers will also square off to determine which nation will stay in the zone's Group I. The loser will be relegated to Group II along with the fourth finisher in Pool B.

game in the league and hopes their hardwork throughout the season will help them gain the finals trophy this year and rebound from last season's heartbreaker.

"I was really happy about it (making it to the championship game) because it's a good final chance to win it all for the seniors from both the boys and girls teams. We practice with the girls often and it's great to see that both of our teams' hard work paid off," Hudkins said.

While Miyawaki is excited for the winner-take-all game today, she acknowledged that GCA will not be an easy foe and that they will have to overcome both the Lady Eagles' aggressive style of play and any negative emotions that might pop up in the most important match of the season.

"GCA is very strong. They are very consistent and are very aggressive," Miyawaki said. "I believe that we have to communicate well and keep a positive attitude to beat GCA. We can't waste time on feeling sad or mad."

Miyawaki's teammate and fellow starting spiker, Sally Lai, agreed with the former's observations on what will it take to defeat GCA.

"I believe that if our team continues to play as one with all our individual strengths combined, [and if we] stay calm, composed, and consistent, I think we have a chance of beating GCA," Lai said.

SIS boys team captain Jun-hee Lee agreed that it will take a cohesive team effort for them to secure the coveted trophy. With the Geckos responsible for dealing the Eagles their only loss this season, Lee and company know what it takes to overpower the favored team.

"The only thing that we have to do to beat GCA in the finals is just play what we practiced," the 12th grader said. "If we communicate and play the best we can play, then I believe that we will be able to beat them."

Hudkins added that they have a good chance to stifle the Eagles because they are more physically and mentally prepared than in the previous years.

"I have complete faith that our team is fully capable of winning the championship. The main thing is to have a good mindset and concentrate," Hudkins said. "We've had trouble in the past composing ourselves, but we are now very experienced and us, seniors, are strong mentally."

in the division. In their first game, Miyawaki and Kwon dominated Daniel Heo and Jaehoon Son, 4-0, 4-1. Then in the semifinals, Kwon and Miyawaki also took only two sets to eliminate Daniel Kang and Andrew Chung, 4-2, 4-3. Kang and Chung set up a semis showdown against Miyawaki and Kwon after slipping past Anthony Gregoire and Helen Kim, 4-3, 1-4, 5-2, at the lower half of the draw.

At the upper half, Ryu and Cho marched into the finals after sweeping Isaac Heo and Serin Chung, 4-3, 4-1, and Steven Goodwin and Jeffrey Seo, 4-3, 4-3. Seo and Goodwin barged into the semis following a 4-2, 4-2 triumph over Allan Lee and Andy Kim.

Meanwhile, two other pairs secured doubles titles in the fundraising tournament.

Juncheol Hwang and Anna Kwon notched the U12 doubles crown after outclassing

Serin Chung and Hoo Wang in straight sets, 4-2, 4-3. Earlier, the finalists also needed only two sets to boot out their respective semis opponents with Hwang and Kwon downing Andy and Dana Lee, 4-0, 4-0, and Serin Chung and Wang topping Irin Chung and Savita Sikkel, 4-2, 4-2. Chung and Sikkel went on to settle for third place after outlasting the Lees, 7-5.

In the U18 novice doubles finale, Alex Park and Junhee Lee prevailed over Gillian Villagomez and Cole Chambers, 4-1, 4-1. Park and Lee clinched the division championship without dropping a single set in the tournament as they also swept Andy Cho and Junbum Huh, 4-3, 4-0, and Michael Lee and Grace Choi, 4-0, 4-1, in the earlier games. Villagomez and Chambers, on the other hand, had a tougher first victory against A.J. Hudkins and Brian Kim, 3-4, 4-0, 5-4, while their second (versus Mauryzon Tybaco and Kuu Nishimura) was won via straight sets, 4-2, 4-2.

After falling short in its title bid last season, Saipan International School is determined to finish on top this time around in the 2018-2019 Commonwealth Coalition of Private Schools Association Volleyball League.

The Lady Geckos lost to Grace Christian Academy in last year's finale and SIS had the same fate in the boys division when it was beaten by Mt. Carmel School. This season, SIS eyes revenge, as it squares off anew with GCA in the girls championship game at 3:30pm at the Gilbert C. Ada Gymnasium, while the Geckos will also be pitted Malika Miyawaki and David Kwon were put to the test in the finals of the U18 advanced doubles event of the Saipan International School Student Council Tennis Tournament and passed it.

Kwon and Miyawaki went through three sets before beating Sam Ryu and Min Cho last Sunday at the Fiesta Resort & Spa Saipan tennis courts and clinching the last title at stake in the two-weekend competition. The winning duo prevailed in the first set 4-2, but failed to finish the finals early when Ryu and Cho pulled off a tough 4-3 victory in the second to force the decider. In the third set, the opposing teams went back-and-forth anew and they were forced to play extended minutes before Kwon and Miyawaki escaped with a 5-3 triumph.

The eventual champions' hard-earned win over Ryu and Cho was the only three-set match they played against the Eagles in the boys title match at 4:30pm.

Malika Miyawaki, who was part of the SIS team that made it to the championship game last season, is glad that they are back in the finals and have a chance to redeem themselves.

"I was happy that both SIS teams made it to the finals. Last year, we also both made it to the finals, but both of us lost," Miyawaki said. "We hope to get the championship for both the girls and boys this time."
